Many of you reading this may have had an opportunity in the past to serve as an intern in what eventually became your chosen career. That internship gave you an opportunity to test drive the work environment you had an interest in at the time. Google’s online dictionary defines intern as a student or trainee who works, sometimes without pay, at a trade or occupation in order to gain work experience. The UT Institute for Public Service, of which MTAS is a part, sponsors a Public Service Internship program where college students, both graduate and undergraduate, of seven different universities across the state, work in city and county governments as interns. These interns bring exceptional knowledge and skills with them when they come to work.

In the past year, 38 students have worked an academic semester (10-12 weeks) in a local government on projects needing the focused work an intern can provide. Twenty-four of those interns have worked through MTAS with various cities. The projects they work on are real, “boots on the ground” projects, that when completed, provide great benefit to the local government for which the intern works. During academic sessions when the interns are also taking courses for their degree, the maximum time they can work is 20 hours per week. If coursework is not an issue, the intern can work up to 40 hours per week. MTAS collaborates with the sponsoring local government in paying the intern a wage of $10 per hour.

Students interested in an internship go through a process where an MTAS mentor and the host city interview the candidate before offering the intern experience. That MTAS mentor stays in touch with the intern throughout the internship period and frequently communicates with the host city to monitor the work of the intern.

MTAS appreciates its responsibility to be your partner in dealing with issues you face each day as a municipal official. But we also have a responsibility to help grow the next generation of bright, hardworking and effective leaders for when today’s officials turn over the keys to city hall. You can benefit from this program by hiring an intern, and you can also partner with us in providing an opportunity to a student with an interest in public service to see what things are really like in city hall. If this partnership is one that interests you and you want to know more, call me at (615) 972-9219. I’ll be glad to talk about it with you, and will be happy to give you the names of some city officials who are frequent supporters of the MTAS Public Service Internship program.

Here are some of the hard-working MTAS Public Service Interns:

Michael Borders is working on the Erwin budget and a standard operating procedures manual for the fire department.

Michael Housewright is working in the Johnson City MTAS office on a series of Personnel Policies, and researching economic development boards.

Aaron Gold is working in Oak Ridge on a regression analysis for the city.

Sydney McGhee is working with Neighborhood Improvements within the Division of Public Works Memphis.

Ronni Madden is working in the Clarksville Parks and Recreation department.
THE CITY OF SEATTLE voted unanimously to raise the minimum wage to $15 per hour. It is currently $9.32 per hour, which is still higher than Tennessee and many other states. In this historic move, there is already discussion about this change spreading to other cities in Washington, such as Bellevue, Olympia, Bellingham, and Spokane. In addition to increasing minimum wage, Seattle officials are looking at potential rent control and changes to the foreclosure process to assist workers who make low wages. The increase to $15 will be staggered over the next few years.

On April 22, 2014, the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals opined (Ford vs. EEOC) that telecommuting (telework) may be required as an accommodation for disabled employees.
under ADA. For many years this was a murky area, particularly when “teamwork and physical presence” was said to be part of the job. Modern technology has brought us to a place where many jobs can be fully performed via telecommuting. The courts determined that Ford failed to show that the employee’s physical presence was a requirement of the job, and further determined that technological advancements now allow more positions to be performed remotely. The court also noted that Ford allowed other employees to telecommute. In addition, attendance problems relating to the disability were not allowed to be used as a basis to deny the employee’s reasonable accommodation, because those absences were related to a disability. The court also determined that moving a work station and other accommodations that the employer agreed to make were not reasonable.

Some good takeaways for Tennessee cities on telecommuting and ADA:

1. The courts have made it clear that their interest is making sure employers provide “reasonable accommodations.”
2. The job description and a fact-finding investigation are critical to determine if a position requires physical presence. The burden of proof is on the employer.
3. The city can require that the employee telecommute during “normal business hours, as opposed to a flexible work schedule. (Note: flex work schedules may also be considered reasonable under ADA)
4. The city is not required to grant the employee’s request to telecommute. However, if the request is reasonable, the company cannot force the employee to accept one of its alternatives.

And finally some good advice from Zackin: “In any event, employers should be careful, especially in light of the EEOC’s interest in the issue, not to reject out-of-hand accommodation requests involving telecommuting. As with any request by a disabled employee for an accommodation, the employer must engage the employee in the ‘interactive process’ to attempt to arrive at an accommodation that is satisfactory to all parties.”

A GROUP OF CITY OF KNOXVILLE EMPLOYEES are members of the first graduating class of the Innovation Academy.

Over the past seven years, the Alliance for Innovation and Arizona State University have kept track of lessons learned and how best to promote innovation in local government. In 2013, they created and piloted a unique curriculum with six teams of participants from local governments across North America. This tested framework provides support for developing innovative projects in communities and encouraging participants to recommend ways to strengthen the culture of innovation in their organization. The focus of the academy is for participants to conceptualize an innovative project from first imaginings through implementation. The academy provided monthly webinars and on-call mentors to help participants develop their programs and to learn how to create a culture of innovation in their cities.

The Knoxville Innovation Team included Russ Jensen, 311 director; Erin Gill, Mayor’s Office of Sustainability; Chip Barry, Operations Project Manager; Patricia Robledo, Small Business Liaison; Ryan Hood, 3-1-1 Intern from the University of Tennessee; Joshalyn Hundley, Title VI Coordinator; Traci McDonell, webmaster/photographer; Stephanie Brewer-Cook, ADA Coordinator; and Christine Fitzgerald, Benefits Manager; and Frances Adams-O’Brien, University of Tennessee Municipal Technical Advisory Service.

Other city and county participants in the academy were Glenview, Ill.; Gainesville, Fla.; Palo Alto, Calif.; Sparks, Nev.; Austin, Texas; Goodyear, Ariz.; and Nevada County, Calif.

The Knoxville Innovation Team collaborated on two internal projects:

1) The City Ambassador Program is an organization engagement program that will strengthen the culture of customer service and cultural competency among city employees by increasing knowledge, motivation and customer service skills.

2) 3-1-1 Touch will educate the senior population on accessing city services using smart technology.

Municipal Officials Complete Level 2 of the Municipal Management Academy

ELEVEN MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS representing eight Tennessee cities (Berry Hill, White House, Spring Hill, Dickson, Thompson Station, Shelbyville, Oak Hill, and Portland), attended the Municipal Technical Advisory Service Municipal Management Academy (MMA) session on April 23, completing the last of the eight required courses in the second level of the Municipal Management Academy. The goal of the Municipal Management Academy (MMA) is to provide effective training and educational opportunities for managers and supervisors in municipal environments throughout Tennessee. The MMA is designed to help both the new and the experienced manager/ supervisor develop the knowledge, skills, and abilities required for successful management. Participants completed 32 hours of training during eight, four-hour classes held at the Williamson County Agricultural Exposition Center. Topics covered in this level 2 of MMA included: communicating, coaching, and counseling; delegation skills; making effective decisions; developing teamwork; employee performance evaluations; motivating your workforce; managing change; and managing a diverse workforce.

Building Your Blueprint for Customer Service

Join us for a Webinar on July 23

You’ve had great customer service and you’ve had terrible customer service, right? Does your organization have a blueprint for delivering the highest level of customer service? If not, where do you start? And if you currently have a blueprint, how do you improve? Join us on July 23 to learn how customers develop expectations and how you can create the customer-focused environment it takes to meet those expectations for both internal and external customers. We’ll discuss asking the right questions of your customers so you can design systems with the customer in mind. And you’ll hear from a panel of your colleagues discussing how they are actively improving customer service in their organizations.
