Interviewing and the Law

by Richard L. Stokes

MTAS Municipal Human Resources Consultant

The right of all persons to work and to advance on the basis of merit, ability, and potential, has deep roots in our American heritage. But for many years this right was restricted by discriminatory employment practices.

Congress provided federal legal enforcement for equal employment in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, with strengthening amendments added in 1972.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act makes it unlawful for an employer:

- (1) to fail, or refuse to hire, or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or
- (2) to limit, segregate, or classify the employees or applicants for employment in any way that would deprive, or tend to deprive, any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.¹

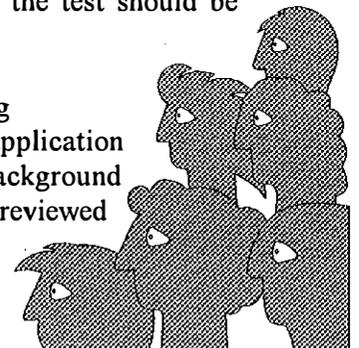

Congress established the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), a bipartisan five-person board, to enforce Title VII.² The president appoints the members, who then must be confirmed by the Senate. Although the strength behind the EEOC's enforcement power lies in its right to file lawsuits against private employers in federal court, the commission's primary importance for public employees centers on the guidelines it issues to clarify Title VII's reach.

PRE-EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Pre-employment selection procedures, including tests and inquiries used to screen prospective applicants, can be particularly vulnerable to adverse impact charges. Title VII allows the use of "professionally developed ability test(s)," provided they are not "designed, intended, or used to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."³ The EEOC requires employers using selection tests to justify them with "data demonstrating that the test is predictive of or significantly correlates with important elements of work behavior which comprise or are relevant to the job or jobs for which candidates are being evaluated."⁴ The EEOC has also published very technical and complicated standards for validating such tests.⁵ In most circumstances, if an employer cannot statistically tie a pre-employment test to specific characteristics necessary for successful job performance, and the employer does not desire to perform a validity study, the test should be discontinued or changed.

Pre-employment screening procedures such as job application forms, interviews, and background investigations should be reviewed for their job relatedness. Employers should limit their questions to matters relevant to determining an applicant's competence. Title VII does not prohibit questions regarding an applicant's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, but these may be used as evidence of discrimination if an employer cannot explain their presence. In addition, these questions may be prohibited by state law. Questions about association or marriage with a particular racial or ethnic group may also be used as evidence of discrimination. Employers should avoid questions about marital status, the age and number of children, plans for pregnancy, or arrangements for child care.⁶

Pre-employment investigations for the purpose of examining an applicant's "fitness" or "character" or to verify statements made on the application should be carefully reviewed by employers for job relatedness. The criteria used in background investigations should be precise, well-defined, and should clearly state the information that will disqualify an applicant; if not, at least some courts refuse to find them job-related. For example, a police department's investigations to seek disqualifying evidence of "bad character, dissolute habits, and immoral conduct" violated Title VII primarily because the criteria were so poorly defined.⁷

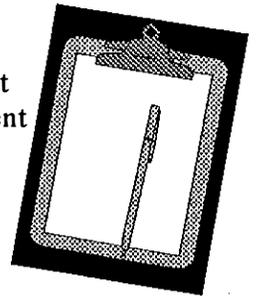

Employers must also conduct investigations using the same procedures and thoroughness, regardless of the applicant's sex, race, ethnic origin, or religion. Proof that an employer compared the results of an in-depth investigation of a member of a protected class with a limited investigation of a nonminority member will defeat an employer's claim that the procedure was related to public business. When no proof of business necessity has been shown, courts have found that background investigations by police⁸ and fire departments⁹ into an applicant's financial history violate Title VII because they disqualify disproportionate numbers of blacks.

In addition, using a less than honorable discharge from the military as a criterion for rejecting an applicant may also violate the act because statistics reveal a higher incidence of such discharges among minorities.¹⁰ Unless solid proof of public business necessity can be shown, employers also should avoid use of arrest records to reject applicants. But, if a conviction would render an applicant unsuitable for a particular job, it might be a valid justification for rejecting the applicant. For example, a conviction for bank robbery would probably justify a bank's refusal to hire an individual as a teller or loan officer, but perhaps not as a janitor. If an employer questions an applicant about prior convictions, inquiries should be accompanied by a statement that a conviction record will not necessarily be a bar to employment. The statement should also say that factors such as age and time of the offense, seriousness and nature of the violation, and rehabilitation will be taken into account.

LAWFUL AND UNLAWFUL INQUIRIES DURING PRE-EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEWS

Any inquiry is forbidden that, although not specifically listed among those below, is designed to elicit information as to race, color, ancestry, age, sex, religion, or arrest and court record, unless based upon a bona fide occupational qualification.

LAWFUL INQUIRIES

NAME

- "Have you worked for this company under a different name?"
- "Is any additional information relative to change of name, use of an assumed name or nickname necessary to enable a check on your work and educational record? If yes, explain."

MARITAL/FAMILY STATUS

- Whether applicant can meet work schedules or activities; commitments that may hinder the meeting of work attendance requirements.
- Inquiries as to a duration of stay or anticipated absences that are made to males and females alike.

AGE

- If a minor, require proof of age in the form of a work permit or a certificate of age.
- Require proof of age by birth certificate after being hired.
- Inquiry as to whether or not applicant meets the minimum age requirements as set by law and requirements that, upon hire, proof of age must be submitted in the form of a birth certificate or other forms of proof of age.
- If age is a legal requirement: "If hired, can you furnish proof of age?", or that hire is subject to verification of age.
- Inquiry as to whether or not an applicant is younger than the employer's regular retirement age.

DISABILITIES

Under the Americans With Disabilities Act, an employer may ask questions to determine whether an applicant can perform specific job functions. The questions should focus on the applicant's ability to perform the job, not on a disability.

UNLAWFUL INQUIRIES

NAME

- Inquiries about the name that would indicate applicant's lineage, ancestry, national origin, or decent.
- Inquiry into previous name of applicant, whether it has been changed by court order or otherwise.
- Indicate: Miss, Mrs., or Ms.

MARITAL/FAMILY STATUS

- Any inquiry indicating whether an applicant is married, single, divorced, engaged, etc.

- Requirements that applicants produce proof of age in the form of a birth certificate or baptismal record.

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 forbids discrimination against persons over the age of 40.

DISABILITIES

- The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 forbids employers from asking job applicants general questions about whether they are handicapped or asking them about the nature and severity of their handicap.
- An employer must be prepared to prove that any physical and mental requirements for a job are due to "business necessity" and the safe performance of the job.
- Except in cases where undue hardship can be proven, employers must make "reasonable accommodations" for the physical and mental limitations of an employee or applicant.

LAWFUL INQUIRIES

DISABILITIES (continued)

The applicant could be asked:

1. Are you able to perform these tasks with or without an accommodation? (If the applicant indicates that she/he can perform the tasks with an accommodation, she/he may be asked:
2. How would you perform the tasks, and with what accommodation(s)?

SEX

- Inquiry or restriction in employment is permissible only where a bona fide occupational qualification exists. This bona fide exception is interpreted very narrowly by the courts and the EEOC and is defined as being based on the need for the individual to be a particular sex.
- The burden of proof rests on the employer to prove that a bona fide occupational qualification does exist, and that all members of the affected class are incapable of performing the job.

APPLICANT'S RACE

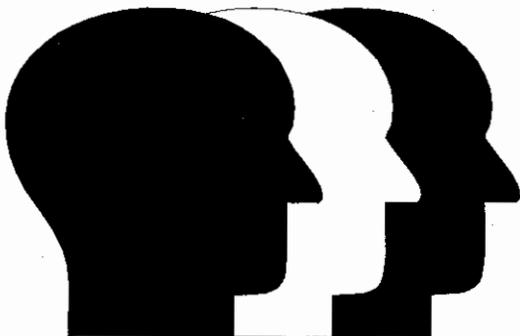

- General distinguishing physical characteristics such as scars, etc.

ADDRESS OR DURATION OF RESIDENCE

 5. whether the individual will need treatment or special leave because of the disability; or
 6. whether the applicant needs accommodations.

SEX

- Sex of the applicant.
- Any other inquiry that would indicate sex.
- Sex is not a bona fide occupational qualification because a job involves physical labor (such as lifting) beyond the capacity of some women nor can employment be restricted just because the job is traditionally labeled 'men's work' or 'women's work.'
- Sex cannot be used as a factor for determining whether or not an applicant will be satisfied in a particular job.

APPLICANT'S RACE

- Color of applicant's skin, eyes, hair, etc., or other questions directly or indirectly indicating race or color.

There are a number of remedies available to employees who prove that employers violated Title VII or allowed others they employ to violate it. Cases under the act are tried without juries, and judges have much discretion in shaping each remedy to fit the particular situation. Depending on the circumstances, remedies such as reinstatement, injunction, back pay, and other related damages have been considered appropriate. In addition, a judge may award attorney's fees to the winner in a Title VII suit with the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1991. Punitive damages and awards for pain and suffering may be granted.

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LEGISLATION

Many other state and federal laws and executive orders also prohibit employment discrimination. Some of the laws are as follows:

Civil Rights Act Section 1866 provides the same contractual rights to minorities as white citizens and covers all private contractual agreements including employment.

Civil Rights Act Section 1870 provides the same rights to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property on the basis of Due Process, and covers all private contractual agreements including employment.

Civil Rights Act Section 1871 provides civil action for deprivation of rights under "color of state or territory."

Equal Pay Act 1963 requires that men and women receive equal pay for equal work and covers all employers.

Executive Order 11246 established the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and commits federal contractors to nondiscriminatory hiring and affirmative action. It covers employers doing business with the federal government.

Executive Order 11375 amends E.O. 11246 to include sex discrimination and covers employers doing business with the federal government.

Age Discrimination in Employment (as amended) prohibits discrimination against any individual 40 and above except for public safety employees. It prohibits discrimination between ages of 40 and 55 and covers all employers having 20 or more employees.

Vocational Rehabilitation Act prohibits employment discrimination of the handicapped and covers government contractors only.

Vietnam Era Veterans Readjustment Act requires affirmative action to employ and advance qualified veterans generally and Vietnam veterans whether disabled or not. It covers employers who enter into contracts with the government for $10,000 or more.

Pregnancy Discrimination Act (amendment to Title VIII) provides that pregnancy be treated like any other disability.

Americans with Disabilities Act establishes comprehensive prohibitions against discrimination on the basis of disability. It covers all public organizations and private entities and applies to any employer with 25 or more employees. After the act has been in effect for two years, it will apply to employers of 15 or more.

Tennessee Human Rights Act prohibits discrimination in employment, public accommodations, and housing because of race, creed, color, religion, sex, age, or national origin. It creates a fifteen member commission to enforce the provisions of the act.

The Tennessee Human Rights Act applies to employers with eight or more employees and provides an employee with two alternate routes for pursuing a claim or discrimination.

- T.C.A. 4-21-302 through 4-21-307 allow an employee to file a charge of discrimination with the Tennessee Human Rights Commission and pursue his claim on an administrative basis.
- On the other hand, T.C.A. 4-21-311 allows an employee to file suit for discrimination in Chancery Court.
