2011 Angie Warren Perkins Award

Candace White

This year's award winner is Candace White, associate professor of public relations. Since 2000, White has served the campus through her work with the Faculty Senate, having served on numerous committees and as the group's president. She helped form the University Faculty Council and served as a voting member on the UT Board of Trustees. She is one of the university's most vocal advocates for improving faculty participation in campus and system governance. She also maintains a full teaching and research load in the College of Communications and Information.

The Angie Warren Perkins Award is awarded this year to a woman faculty member who is still on a probationary tenure track and who shows outstanding promise of scholarship, teaching, and/or other contributions to campus intellectual life.

Angie Warren Perkins was the first dean of women at the University of Tennessee, at the turn of the 20th Century. The award named for her is presented by the Commission for Women and recognizes an outstanding faculty member.

2011 Honors

- Highest Honors
- Diversity and Campus Environment Awards
- Outreach and Service Awards
- Research and Creative Achievement Awards
- Student Awards
- Teaching Awards

Previous Winners

- 2010 Award Recipients
- 2009 Award Recipients
- 2008 Award Recipients
- 2007 Award Recipients