

To the Graduate council:

I am submitting herewith a thesis written by Frances Curtis Allison entitled "A Descriptive Guide to the Processed Manuscript Collection of the Calvin M. McClung Historical Collection of the Knox County Public Library System". I have examined the final copy of this thesis for form and content and recommend that it be accepted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Master of Science in Library Science.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Encouragement and help from many persons led to the completion of the guide which follows. I am particularly indebted to Steve Cotham, Head of the Calvin M. McClung Historical Collection for his criticism, consultation, and understanding. Thanks go, too, to McClung staff member Sally Ripatti, who processed many of the collections. Linda Posey processed some of the collections, and her thesis done in 1974 covers twenty-five of the major collections which I have also included in different form in my guide.

In particular, I am indebted to my advisor and Major Professor, J. Michael Pemberton, and my other committee members, Gary R. Purcell and William C. Robinson, for their time and consideration.

ABSTRACT

Historical records and manuscripts on East Tennessee, Tennessee, and the region are housed in the Calvin M. McClung Historical Collection of the Knox County Public Library System. Located in the East Tennessee Historical Center, the McClung Collection has been a department of the Knox County Public Library System since 1921. The use of the collection is free to genealogists and researchers. All materials are for reference use only and do not circulate.

Access and location of the manuscript items and family genealogy files pose problems to users. Three indexes are included in the guide to facilitate use; these are personal name (often correspondence), family name, and subject. Information used to compile this guide was obtained from card files, accession sheets, calendars, and data from those who have processed the materials.

The result of this research is a descriptive guide only to those collections which have been processed to date. The great majority of the manuscript collections remain, at this time, only partially processed or not yet processed. By the very nature of acquisition of collections, this is an ongoing project. The collections included are those to which the researcher will have ready access with the help of staff members.

PREFACE

The Calvin M. McClung Historical Collection of the Knox County Public Library System is located in the East Tennessee Historical Center in Knoxville, Tennessee. The McClung Collection was started when Barbara Adair McClung donated her late husband's private library to Lawson McGhee Library in 1921. Her husband, Calvin Morgan McClung was a student of Southern history and genealogy. The collection is primarily used by researchers of local history, students, historians, and genealogists. Users can search census records, county records, cultural, educational, or business related materials, as well as family histories and biographies. Holdings also consist of historic public records of East Tennessee counties, over 25,000 books, over 6,200 rolls of microfilm, over 24,000 microfiche, individual maps, the James E. Thompson collection of thousands of photographs and negatives, and extensive genealogical and historical files. The genealogical and historical files are made up of research papers donated by genealogists and newspaper clipping files.

Manuscript collections held by the McClung Collection include papers of prominent Tennesseans and records of many Knoxville area businesses. Among the manuscripts are papers of such prominent Tennesseans as Governor William Blount, President Andrew Johnson, Thomas Amis Rogers Nelson, who was defense counsel for President Andrew Johnson in his impeachment trial, Charles McClung McGhee who was a legislator and who established Lawson McGhee Library in 1885, John Sevier, Governor William "Parson" Brownlow, and Senator L. D. Tyson. McClung manuscript items used by genealogists contain information on thousands of families. Information on Knoxville and area businesses, organizations, and institutions can also be obtained from the McClung manuscripts.

As a reference staff member of the collection, I found the need for a usable guide to be quite apparent. My employment with the McClung Collection during the past year has given me an in-depth understanding of the role and problems of the reference staff member. I had been aware only of the user's perspective since for twenty-five years one of my recreational activities was local history and genealogy research. This involvement with primary materials and some writers of local histories led me to seek a Master's Degree in Library and Information Science. My frustrations as a user and my frustrations as a reference staff member intensified my sense of urgency to find or create aids to inaccessible materials.

This guide was developed as a thesis project because of continuing access problems with the use of the manuscript collections. The general pattern of usage of the collection is that those patrons using the McClung Collection for the first time are given a brief tour of the research area. They then consult the reference personnel with questions about their particular interest. After a reference interview, the need of the patron is determined, and ideally all available information on the subject or family held at the McClung Collection is made available. The reference staff works closely with those who need help with their questions. The use of the traditional card catalog, vertical file catalog, or genealogy catalog (all in card files) are the present finding aids which make it possible for users to locate and request materials. Many of the papers and clippings are in vertical files and are located away from the public area are not available in this card file or the central card catalog. The lack of a guide makes the ideal of full access to all materials impractical.

Staff members may call upon the Director of the McClung Collection or the manuscripts professional staff member, who has processed most of the collections, for aid in locating materials on a specific subjects. If they are unavailable, however, to work with the staff or patron due to scheduling or other conflicts, the items located in the manuscripts rooms are not accessible. Staff members who work with the public are not to leave the reading room unattended, so it is usually inconvenient for them to search for the materials. There are times when a patron is told about papers given to the library and requests them. The reference staff is not always aware of these donations, and this can cause an awkward situation. This guide to one hundred and thirty-three collections which I have compiled and indexed gives the patrons and staff members a valuable ready reference tool in which to look for subjects or names and then to access the desired manuscript collections.

After identifying and locating the processed manuscripts, I used them and information pertaining to them as the basis for the guide's compilation. The information is on accession sheets and/or calendars. The accession form used for recording the data was one of the main sources which I used. Information recorded on the accession form includes name of collection, date of receipt, name and address of donor, types and quantity of materials, and any explanatory notes. Examination of the collections and the calendars with them listing the box contents, where available, was used for those items about which there was a question. Twenty-five of the collections were processed in 1974 as a master's thesis. Data from these twenty-five collections, which is not available on the accession sheets, was integrated with the data from the accessions of the other processed collections to make up the one hundred thirty-three described in this guide.

A Guide to the Manuscript Collection of the South Caroliniana Library at the University of South Carolina was selected for use here as a model primarily used for entry format. Due to the fact that our collections are not presently numbered, this model was the best guide because the collection descriptions in the body of the thesis are, like the model, arranged alphabetically by collection title. The title headings are given in uppercase type. Some entries are referred to as "collections" and some as "papers". This is due to the nature of the materials included and the names assigned to the collections on the accession sheets. Some collections contain papers or correspondence only, while others include maps, photographs, or ephemera in the collection. Brief identification of the types of materials included follow the collection title. Even though materials such as photographs and maps may be listed in the collection descriptions selected for this thesis, they are not the primary reason for the guide. The amount of storage space needed (the number of boxes used for each collection) is cited after the types of materials included as an indication of the collection's size. The form here is in keeping with the traditional form in other guides, listing the number of manuscript (ms.) boxes or volumes. By convention, these are listed by numeral rather than by written numbers. Dates, biographical and historic data listed in some entries were obtained from the sources in the bibliography as well as through examination of the actual collections.

The use of some of the entries is listed as "restricted." The donor of the materials has restricted the use to members of an organization, to qualified researchers, or by time span (examples: "after twenty-five years" or "not to be used during my lifetime"). Some examples of restricted collections are: patriotic service organizations which are restricted to members only, St. John's Orphanage Records used only with permission and only by the person whose record is involved, and the World's Fair Collection which can be used only after a certain number of years. This collection is not listed in this guide because it is not yet processed.

Three indexes are used in the second part of the guide (see pages 42-81). Users will be able to search these indexes for genealogy research folders by family name, a surname listed in a collection, or a subject. The page preceding the indexes explains in detail their usage and contents.

The manuscript materials housed in the McClung Collection which were excluded from this guide because of time and space considerations were the unprocessed or partially processed collections and miscellaneous manuscripts.

As additional collections are processed, this guide can be added to and will serve as a step toward a future major guide which will include, eventually, all of the materials in the McClung Collection. It is the desire of the McClung Collection staff to have a complete guide to all of the resources which we have available for researcher's needs. Future additions would include the separate maps, miscellaneous manuscripts, vertical files, and any other materials available.

USE OF THE INDEXES

Three indexes follow this page. The correct use of them is of extreme importance in aiding users and staff members of the McClung Historical Collection. Users are generally interested in local history or genealogy and are searching for a name or place name. The indexes are described below and should expedite access to the information.

FAMILY NAME GENEALOGY INDEX ---pages 43-54.

This index gives the family names on which research has been done and is available through the collection. Much of the work has been done by genealogists and the rest collected by family members or those interested in the family.

PERSONAL SURNAME INDEX -- pages 55-63.

This index is primarily one of correspondence. A limited number of entries are referred to in the body of the text and in a one time use, and are not correspondence. Names mentioned in the text which do not have to do with family genealogies are also included. Reference to the page number listed in the index will lead the user to the description of the collection items.

SUBJECT INDEX-- pages 64-72.

This broad general index refers to places, businesses, writing, organizations, military information, and other information basically East Tennessee in nature. Those subjects which are included in the manuscripts in this guide are easily accessible by using this index.

Frances Curtis Allison was born in Elizabethton, Tennessee, on November 18, 1935. She attended elementary schools in that city and graduated from Elizabethton High School in June 1953. The following September she entered the University of Tennessee, and in August 1957 she received a Bachelor of Science Degree in Education.

After teaching with the Knox County School system for one year, she moved to Tullahoma, Tennessee, and was employed as a teacher with the Tullahoma City Schools from 1967-1985. While teaching, she completed 30 graduate semester hours at Middle Tennessee State University.

In 1985, she entered the Graduate School of Library and Information Science and joined the staff of the Calvin M. McClung Historical Collection of the Knox County Public Library System in 1986. She received the degree of Master of Science in Library Science in June 1987.
