Abstract

Cross Anchor Cemetery, located at Mt. Pleasant Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Afton, Tennessee, is the site of over three thousand graves. Afton is a small rural area in Greene County located in Upper East Tennessee. The present day Greene County was organized in 1783 (Schneider, 2008). Cross Anchor Cemetery is one of the largest cemeteries in the state, as well as one of the oldest. Anthropologists often use demographic data as a method of studying and better understanding human populations. Demography is the study of the statistical data surrounding birth rates, death rates, and migration of humans. Methods of collecting such data include the United States Census and state health department records to name a few. A collection of data from Cross Anchor Cemetery shows some of the trends in demography regarding birth, age, and death. These data can help establish trends about life and death of the population of Green County, Tennessee. In addition to demographic analysis, some trends regarding the everyday life of Greene County residents can also be inferred from an analysis of gravestone style and decoration. A small sample of the cemetery data was used to analyze trends in central decorative motif and gravestone size and the information that can be learned about the views toward death and dying in a rural region.

What is Demography?

Anthropologists often use demographic data as a method of studying and better understanding human populations. Demography is the study of the statistical data surrounding birth rates, death rates, and migration of humans. Methods of collecting such data include the United States Census and state health department records to name a few. A collection of data from Cross Anchor Cemetery in Greene County, Tennessee shows some of the trends in demography regarding birth, age, and death. From this cemetery, a sample of one thousand gravestones was analyzed for the person's name, date of birth, and date of death. From this information, assessments were made about the individual's age at death and their sex. The data were then divided into two cohorts based on time period in which the person was born. The "pre-1900" cohort is composed of individuals born before the year 1900. The "1900 and later" cohort is composed of individuals born in 1900 or after. This research is aimed at discerning trends in Greene County, Tennessee with regard to rates of birth, death, and survivorship as well as what advances in technology and significant life events may have affected these trends.

Background

Cross Anchor Cemetery, located at Mt. Pleasant Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Afton, Tennessee, contains the site of over three thousand graves. Afton is a small rural area located in Greene County located in Upper East Tennessee. Greene County was organized in 1783 (Schneider, 2008). Cross Anchor Cemetery is one of the largest cemeteries in the state, as well as one of the oldest. One headstone at Cross Anchor belongs to Betsy Kelsey and is dated to 1796.

Cross Anchor Cemetery was established with the burial of one of Greene County's earliest settlers. According to local legend, in 1772 a group of pioneers began to build a log cabin in the location of the present day church. One of these pioneers was killed by a falling log and the others fashioned a Yellow Poplar coffin to protect the body of their dead friend from molestation by Native Americans. This coffin was simply two pieces of hollowed out log: one for the container, and one for the lid. This coffin was then buried under the floor of the log cabin which is no longer standing (Mt. Pleasant C.P. Church Bulletin, 2010).

The Church currently stands on the site of the original cemetery which was moved to expand the church grounds. Upkeep of the cemetery and church grounds is now performed by church members and volunteers (Lloyd Dawson 2011, pers. comm.). In addition, the Cross Anchor Cemetery is still actively accepting burials (Lloyd Dawson 2011, pers. comm.). This huge cemetery has great time depth and is located in an area populated mostly by farmers and small business owners. It is interesting to see in this cemetery, not only the trends in gravestone decoration, but way in which gravestone decoration symbolizes attitudes about life and death. There is much to learn from this historic cemetery about the way of life for Greene County residents in the past.

Landscape

Greene County is a rural area comprised of rolling hills and vast areas of farmland. It is cared for and maintained by the Elders of the Mt. Pleasant Cumberland Presbyterian Church near which the cemetery is located (Lloyd Dawson 2011, pers. comm.). The cemetery began with graves where the church currently stands but has since expanded greatly. The cemetery is now divided into eight sections, some of which still have plots available for purchase (Lloyd Dawson 2011, pers. comm.). There is some fencing around the oldest sections of the cemetery; however, fencing does not separate individual sections. The cemetery also owns a vast amount of land surrounding the current site that will be available for plot purchase when the other land is full.

In Figure 1 above, the eight sections are denoted by letters. Sections D1 and D2 are the oldest, and most gravestones in these sections are illegible due to erosion. Sections A and B also have some of the oldest graves and are located immediately next to the church building. Sections C, E, F, and G hold the more recent graves and are still in use today. Some plots in these sections are still available for purchase. While not all of the plots in the older sections are full, they have been sold. It is believed that family members were not aware of the purchase of these plots roughly two hundred years ago, and now there is no immediate family left to fill those plots.

Gravestones

Appendix A shows a sample of forty gravestones from Cross Anchor Cemetery chosen for analysis. The information listed shows the interred person's name, date of birth (if given), date of death (if given), age at death, location of the stone in the cemetery, relative size of the gravestone, as well as the central decorative motif. Additional notes about the gravestones were made pertaining to the location of family plots, wording of epitaphs, and presence of footstones and other decorative objects that are not listed in this table. The sample is predominately taken from sections A, B, and C with a few stones from the D sections. The focus on these particular sections is due to gravestone legibility as well as the predominance of change in gravestone styles in these sections. While sections E, F, and G do have a large number of gravestones, they are predominately from the last twenty to thirty years and show very little variation in stone size, shape, material, or decoration.

Gravestone Analysis- Size, Shape, and Decoration

There are a wide variety of gravestones present in the Cross Anchor Cemetery that differ in size, shape, style of decoration, as well as epitaphs and other information. The oldest graves, located in sections D1 and D2, are fairly small and demonstrate little variation in stone shape. Due to erosion, the majority of these gravestones are illegible and little information is available (Fig. 4). The gravestones in section A and B vary in size from very small, rectangular stones (Fig. 5) to very large, obelisks (Fig. 6) depending on the time period in which they were made. Based on the sample of gravestones, there seems to be a trend toward increasing stone sizes through time (Fig. 7). The gravestones in section C still exhibit some variation but there is a trend toward standardizing stone shape and size in this section with very little shape or size variation in sections E, F, and G. In addition, there is also a trend toward increasing stone thickness over time. This increase in size, thickness, and complexity of stone shape is likely due to increased economic stability and improving stone carving technology. It is likely that as time went on, people in Greene County were able to afford more expensive gravestones and gravestone makers improved their methods.

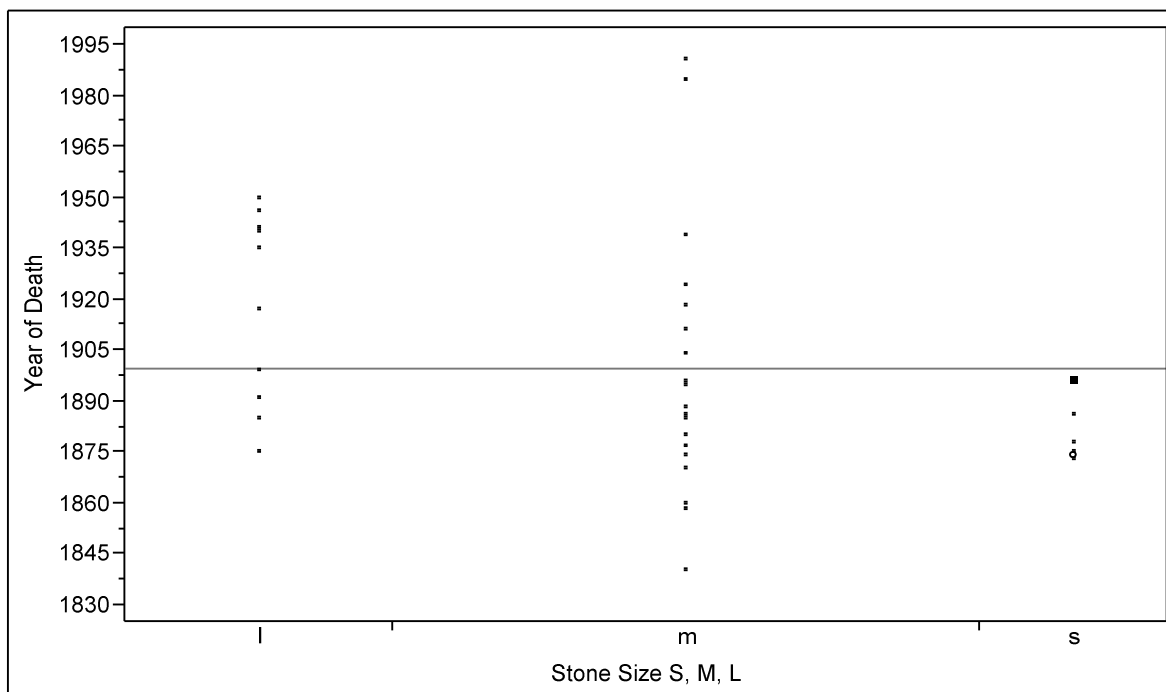

Figure 5: Year of Death and Stone Size (missing two values: Carol Lynn Coffman- not yet deceased; Lucinda J. Malone- illegible date of death).

Another pattern can be seen in regard to gravestone size and age at death (Fig. 8). Medium sized gravestones can be seen for numerous individuals of varying age. Small gravestones, on the contrary, appear to be mostly restricted to young individuals. In addition, large gravestones appear to have been used only for older individuals—those over fifty years of age at death.

Decoration style is also an important factor in the study of gravestones and mortuary practice. In the table above, the central decorative theme is listed for each individual gravestone.

These themes can be interpreted to show the potential views about death and dying during different periods in history. In his article, James Hijiya divides American gravestone styles into six categories by time period (1983). These divisions are similar to those of Dethlefsen and Deetz in 1966 in that Hijiya uses the same division of time. However, Hijiya's analysis can be better applied to gravestones in regions of the United States outside of New England. The three styles set forth by Hijiya that are applicable to Cross Anchor Cemetery are Urn and Willow (1780-1850), Monumentalism (1840-1920), and Modern Plain Style (1900-2001) (1983). Hijiya relates that each of these styles can be interpreted to reflect a population's attitude regarding death and dying (1983).

The Urn and Willow motif, seen only once in my Cross Anchor Cemetery sample, can be interpreted as a turning point in the attitudes of historic peoples toward death and the way in which funerary practices occurred. Hijiya's analysis shows that use of the Urn and Willow motif symbolizes great mourning and was accompanied by elaborate funerary practice not previously seen (1983). Hijiya states, "...when Angels gave way to Urn-and-Willows...mourning supplanted fear and hope as the primary attitude toward death" (1983). An example of this motif in Cross Anchor Cemetery can be seen on the gravestone of L.C. Johnson, presumably a well-liked male of sixty years of age at his death in 1880 (Fig. 9). The fact that this instance of Urn and Willow motif occurred outside of Hijiya's range for the style (1780-1850) may indicate that the people of rural Greene County were delayed in terms of increasing technology and fashion. This would be expected for rural regions located far from a city center.

Cross Anchor Cemetery.

Hijiya's Monumentalist style is characterized by significant variability in central motif and marked increase in stone size. This Monumentalist style indicates a change in attitude about death to focus on the individual deceased and that person's lifetime accomplishments (Hijiya, 1983). This is one of the predominant styles of gravestone at Cross Anchor Cemetery. The wide variety of decorative motifs and the trend toward increased gravestone size is seen throughout most of sections A, B, and C. The graph below shows the counts of each of the central decorative motifs noted in the Cross Anchor sample (Fig. 10). Floral patterns and Ivy were the most common motifs in the sample. Floral motifs are thought to symbolize many different things based on the particular type of flower portrayed. Ivy, on the other hand, is a symbol of friendship (Santore, 2010). Of these floral motifs, the dogwood is common. Dogwood motifs can be interpreted as symbols of resurrection and eternal life. This theme is shown on the Tweed-Hulse family gravestone at Cross Anchor (Fig. 11). We can assume that this stone was erected in or after 1939, as this is the year of death of the earliest deceased. Again, Hijiya's time period for the Monumentalist style ends before this date, likely due to the delayed spread of ideas to the rural area.

Other central motifs, as described by Hijiya and demonstrated in the Cross Anchor sample, are restricted to certain individuals based on age, profession, or membership in a society, family, or group (1983). The use of animals (lamb, dove, etc.) is often restricted to children's gravestones symbolizing innocence and/or untimely death. The figure (Fig. 12) below shows the distribution of central motifs by age class. Note the restriction of animal motifs (Fig. 13 and 14) to individuals under the age of twelve. In addition, the motif of holding hands (Fig. 15) is restricted to individuals over sixty. These individuals were likely married and the clasped hands motif symbolizes unity (Santore, 2010).

Another prominent motif at Cross Anchor cemetery is the Hand Pointing Upward (Fig. 16). There are five gravestones out of the Cross Anchor sample (n=40) that have this Hand Pointing Up central motif. This motif is thought to symbolize the notion that the soul of the deceased is in heaven (Santore, 2010). The predominance of this motif lends much information about the attitude of historic peoples regarding death. Hijiya points out that a reluctance of the living to part with the dead occurs during the nineteenth century (1983). The Hand Pointing Up motif could be a way of saying that the soul of the deceased was still near or was watching over the living.

There are numerous other styles of central motif present in Cross Anchor cemetery. This significant variation is a key example of Hijiya's Monumentalism period of gravestone style. The variation clearly focuses on the individual deceased rather than the mourners and family members. Following the Monumentalist period, Hijiya notes a movement toward more plain gravestones in a period he terms, Modern Plain Style (1983). Although Hijiya's period ends in 2001, this is still the predominant style of gravestones chosen today. He characterizes this period by a lack of decorative ornamentation and decreasing variation in stone size, shape, and material (Hijiya, 1983). Often, the only decoration on these Modern Plain Style stones is the family name of the deceased. These Modern Plain Style gravestones (Fig. 17) can be found in the newer sections (E, F, and G) of Cross Anchor Cemetery as well as sparsely in Section C. Hijiya attributes this reversion toward the plain style to a resigned attitude toward death. He discusses that in a 1960's poll, "54 percent of respondents said [death] was "like a long sleep" (Hijiya, 1983). Hijiya also discusses a decreased feeling of grief by the living for the dead as a possible reason for the switch back to a plain style seen in the 1700's (1983). This is likely due to increased life expectancy and the feeling that the elderly have lived a full life (Hijiya, 1983).

This may lead, however, to differing styles of gravestone for young people who die. Our feelings of grief may be heightened when we feel that a friend or loved one has suffered an untimely death.

Demography at Cross Anchor Cemetery

A sample of 996 individuals was taken from Cross Anchor Cemetery. Information from the gravestones such as: date of birth, date of death, and name were used to form observations about the demography of the population in Greene County (Appendix B). From this data, assessments were made to calculate the age of each individual and the individual's name was used to discern his or her sex. The sample was then divided into two cohorts corresponding to the year in which an individual was born. These cohorts were "pre-1900" and "1900 and later." In addition, assessments were made based on the sex of individuals from each cohort. The sex distributions are shown below (Fig. 18 and 19). Several trends can be seen in regard to demographic patterns in the cemetery that can shed some information about the Greene County population as a whole during these two time periods.

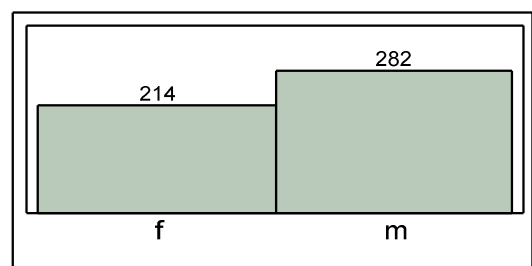

Figure19: 1900 and Later Cohort, Distribution of individual by sex

Population

From the data, a population pyramid was created. The population of Cross Anchor Cemetery appears to be comprised mostly of individuals in age intervals six through eight, i.e., individuals aged fifty to eighty-nine (Figure 20). Age group eight, for instance, makes up almost fifty percent of the total Cross Anchor Sample. In addition, there is a significant number of individuals in age interval one. This is likely due to higher rates of infant mortality. The decrease in number of individuals in age intervals two through four indicates that only a small number of individuals, those aged ten through forty-nine, died and were buried in Cross Anchor Cemetery. There are also a small number of individuals present over the age of ninety and an especially small amount of males over ninety. It is possible that women may have lived longer than men because men were most likely involved in rigorous farm labor that women did not take place in – Greene County is still a predominant farm town today.

Birth Rates

For the pre-1900 cohort, there is a fairly steady rate of births represented. From the years 1762 to 1852, there is an average of 1.46 births represented in the Cross Anchor sample (Fig. 21). Beginning in 1853, however, the average number of births in the Cross Anchor sample increases to 9.65 births per year (Fig. 22). This increase could be due to an increase in overall population size in the Greene County area, an increased birth rate in the Greene County population, or simply an increase in usage of the Cross Anchor Cemetery for burial purposes.

For the 1900 and later cohort, there continues to be a fairly large number of births that begins to taper off around 1942. The average number of births from 1900 to 1942 is 5.72 births per year (Fig. 23). Beginning in 1943, however, the average falls to 1.93 births per year (Fig. 24). This is consistent with Bongaarts article in which he states that in industrialized nations, such as the United States, fertility rates have declined to less than two births per woman (1998). This decline could be due to improvements in technology that have decreased the rate of infant mortality. Women must no longer birth many children in order to have one or two of them survive past infancy.

Survivorship

The Survivorship of a cohort is the proportion of a group that survives to each age group. From the Cross Anchor Cemetery Survivorship Curve, it is clear that, for both cohorts examined, mortality is low for the younger age groups (Fig. 25). The slope of the curve is very shallow for both cohorts but the 1900 and later cohort slope begins to steepen at age interval four. The pre-1900 cohort's slope continues to be shallow until age interval five. These curves show that survivorship in the Cross Anchor sample was high for individuals between zero and forty years of age and significantly decreases by age sixty for both cohorts.

Interestingly, the survivorship curve for the pre-1900 sample decreases less sharply from age interval eight to age interval ten than the 1900 and later cohort. This could be due to the fact that individuals born in the year 1900 or later, and that will survive into age intervals nine, ten, and eleven, may not yet be deceased.

Mortality

Pre-1900 Cohort

The number of deaths at Cross Anchor Cemetery in the pre-1900 cohort is low from the year 1811 until 1949 with an average of 3.5 deaths per year (Fig.26). Beginning in 1918 and continuing through 1970, the number of deaths increases (Fig. 27) to 6.8 deaths per year with large numbers of deaths in 1940 (13 deaths), 1963 (13 deaths), 1966 (15 deaths), and 1970 (14 deaths). Beginning in 1971 and continuing through 1999, however, the number of deaths begins to decrease again (Fig. 28). The average for this time period falls to 2.9 deaths per year.

1900 and later Cohort

Similar to the pre-1900 cohort, the 1900 and later cohort contains a low number of deaths from 1915 until 1971 (Fig. 29). This time period shows an average of 2.5 deaths per year. Beginning in 1972, however, the number of deaths increases to 9.7 deaths per year on average (Fig. 30). The 1972- 2010 time period contains high numbers of deaths in the years 1982, 1990, 1996, and 1997 with 14, 16, 17, and 16 deaths respectively.

Mortality Analysis

There are many possible explanations for the changes in mortality rates through time. Due to a lack of historical records for most rural areas, it is difficult to say for certain what caused such fluctuation in mortality in areas such as Greene County. In fact, Higgs states, “As late as 1910 only about a third of the rural population – where “rural” means places of less than 10,000 – was subject to death registration” (1973). Higgs proposes that the majority of decline in mortality post- 1920 can be attributed to a decrease in death from the acquisition of infectious diseases (1973). The low numbers of deaths during the 1800's and early 1900's may be due to a low overall population in Greene County and limited use of Cross Anchor Cemetery. The higher numbers of deaths in the mid- to late 1900's could be due to increased overall population in Greene County as well as periods of epidemics such as the Spanish Flu of 1918-1920, the Polio Epidemic of 1940-1953, and Typhoid Fever from 1920-1950. The declines in mortality at Cross Anchor Cemetery are likely due to better sanitation, occurring in most regions by the 1920's (Higgs 1973), as well as the increased medical technology such as vaccinations and anti-bacterial products.

Life Expectancy

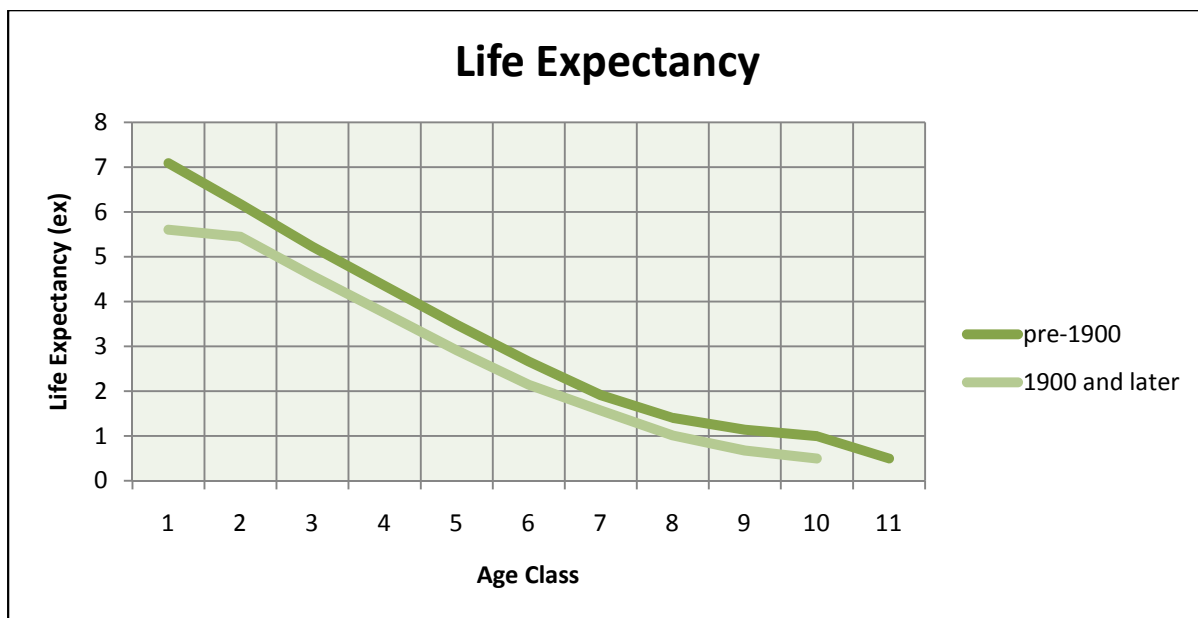

Figure 31: Graph of Life Expectancy for pre-1900 and 1900 and later cohorts, Cross Anchor Cemetery, Greene County, Tennessee

Figure 31 shows the life expectancy of the Cross Anchor Cemetery sample. Life expectancy is the age at which individuals in a population are expected to reach based on the number of years they have already lived. In the figure, the overall life expectancy is greater for the pre-1900 cohort than for the 1900 and later cohort. The slope of the pre-1900 cohort is much steeper, however, indicating a higher rate of infant mortality in those earlier years. The gradual decline of the life expectancy of age intervals one and two for the 1900 and later cohort is indicative of higher rates of survivability by infants and adolescents. Arehart-Treichel states that the fact that the United States health system has learned to better combat childhood disease, especially those affecting infants, has been the most influential change affecting life expectancy of the entire population (1982).

Conclusion

Cemetery data is a beneficial source of both historic and demographic data that can lend much information to anthropologists regarding life and death especially for rural regions that are often under-documented. The use of demographic information can help anthropologists determine trends in population size, birth and death rates, and mortality and survivorship. These data are very influential in other disciplines such as epidemiology as well as actuary studies.

Cross Anchor Cemetery in Greene County, Tennessee can also lend much information to historic archaeological perspectives about attitudes toward life and death in a rural community. The analysis of gravestone size, shape, decoration, and inscription can reveal valuable information about life for early settlers in the Southeastern United States as well as contemporary populations. In addition, changes in lifeways through time can also be discerned. Cross Anchor Cemetery appears to parallel other cemeteries in decorative motif, gravestone size, and shape as seen through the comparison with the article by James Hijiya. The study of Southeastern United States gravestones styles and mortuary practice has often been overlooked by scientists, but holds much value. This unique region of the United States has a rich history—otherwise possibly overlooked—that may be revealed through gravestone analysis.
