

I can't believe I made a documentary for my thesis. I wonder if previous College Scholars have ever done this. But, I'm almost certain that many will do "outrageous" things like this for their thesis. After all, writing research papers has become so mundane. I think so, anyway. At least, this was one of the main motivators for doing a documentary. I really didn't want to write a paper. Ironically, I think I ended up writing more for this video than I would have had I done a standard research paper. But of course, the thought of less writing was not the only reason for doing the video. Almost a year ago, I discovered my calling. Well, it's my calling for this period of my life. It'll probably change within ten years or so. Who knows? Maybe it won't. But, the point is I've unearthed a sincere love for visual conception. My favorite form of it so far has been in moving images. It's such a perfect format for making stories come to life. Stories. What great magicians they are. They have the power to release your worries so you can worry about some other person who doesn't exist. But that's the power of it. You know it doesn't matter. So, you allow yourself to experience all the concavities of life – pain, love, sorry, laughter, jealousy, youth – because it's risk free. No, nothing's gained. But, nothing's lost either.

I think this is one of the main reasons people have such a profound interest in documentaries. Not only are they interesting stories, but they're real. At least, that's what the documentarist wants his/her audience to believe. There's a greater depth in witnessing something real. It's almost the perfect justification to being noisy. Legal peeping toms. I think people can't help but compare their lives to others. They're usually always wondering what other people are doing – whether or not they've found a certain secret to happiness that their own lives are lacking. Or, they want to make sure that they are the "normal ones" in society while the real fools and crazies make fun of their useless lives on A&E or the Jerry Springer Show.

I almost shamefully admit that this was one of the attractions that drew me to broadcasting. I not only like stories, but I'm also a little noisy, too. But at least I am not a gossip. I've never delighted in sharing other's woes with people. Maybe it's because I've been a victim of gossip myself. But, I do have an interest in people's lives. Who are they? What do they do? How did they come to do the things they're doing? Are they married? Is it successful? Why or why not? What's the secret? How did they know they were ready? So many questions. It's a sad reflection of my own insecurities. And I haven't fully realized the truth, yet - that there are no answers to these questions. It's just the mystery of life. But it's the drive to know what other people do and how they handle their problems and how they really live – if they're truly living at all - that keeps me interested in this field. It's a yearning to learn. To learn how to live.

This is why I do documentaries.

The following is a series of various journal entries I wrote while making the documentary. They offer a glimpse of the project's process and my own personal thoughts about it. It's not an extensive journal because I spent most of my time writing outlines and preliminary scripts. I've also included these in the package. To me, they're more interesting than the actual journal entries.

October 7, 1999

I'm starting this journal basically to prove that I actually put some thought, time and effort into this program just in case the final piece turns out to be a complete flop. But, I don't think it will be. At least I truly hope not anyway. So far, things are going pretty good. I've selected, changed and finally settled on a topic – the multifaceted Shamrock team – a sort of intramural group comprised of ten players (I think) who are about as different personally and demographically as MTV is from CNN. They are such an interesting combination of professionals, college students, ex-hippies, fathers, brothers, sons, etc. that their individuality and complexity compels this project to succeed.

Must admit that I cannot be given credit for this idea. I originally wanted to do a documentary on the culture of Knoxville. Trust me, it not only sounds like a dead-end, it is one. I then, after going to Moose's one night with my roommate (the second time I've been there in four years), pondered the idea of analyzing and documenting the social life of your average college student. This would mean, of course, going to as many keggers, parties, mixers and clubs as one could imagine. This idea quickly became obsolete when I realized I'd be completely miserable working on it. I consider myself to be a very low-key college student who does not enjoy and rarely participates in the “normal” or “average” social activities that college students do. I hate bars and cannot stand club music.

Needless to say, I was lost, confused, bewildered, and not to mention, completely stressed out. I didn’t know what to do, but I knew I still wanted to do a documentary. One night, my boyfriend, Matt Mahoney, and I went to play pick-up-soccer at the Parker Sport’s Arena on Lovell Road. Parker was the place where Matt and his roller hockey team played their games every Sunday afternoon. After listening to my complaints and confusion, Matt suggested that I do the video on the Shamrocks. I dismissed it immediately, but he kept on about it. He said it would be really interesting because the guys were so different from one another but they all played on the same team together.

After thinking about it for a while, it sounded like a better idea than I originally thought. Plus, I knew and loved all the guys, and they’d be very accessible for interviews. Also, his hockey games were already a part of my life; all I would have to do was carry my camera everywhere I went to capture as much as I could. The only problem remaining was how to form the story. And who would be interested these guys anyway.

video notes:

- mostly got shots of Matt (of course)
- some good close-ups of Pat’s scowl
- Derrick’s slapshot attempts
- Actually went into rink to film
- Think of ways to attach camera to player’s chest (backpack?)

October 9, 1999

We got to Parker about 5:45 after wedging our way in and out of UT football traffic. The drive was even nastier due to rain. To make matters worse, Pat was in a foul mood. He had wanted to leave right at five o'clock so we could swing by the new hockey store before practice. But, I got there at 5:15 – too late by his standards. I've been unofficially dubbed the chauffeur for just about every even we go to – including hockey games and practices.

Practices are set especially for the team, but they aren't limited to just the players. I've even practiced with them before. So has John, Bob's seven-year-old son. Not all the players are here today. Only Matt, Derrick, Pat and Bob decided to show up. Guess the rest are either at the football game or stayed home because of the rain. OJ's here, too. Looks like he's going to practice being goalie.

October 10, 1999

Game day. It's 12:30. Game starts at 1:00 today. Guys are changing. I'm sitting in the booth watching a hockey clinic in session. This really amazes me – all these men – mostly grown men – and a couple of women – are skating around trying to learn how to skate and maneuver a hockey puck at the same time. Admittedly, it's no easy feat – and these guys on the rink are prime examples. They're stumbling around, letting pucks fly by them, dragging their skates and have a look of utter confusion written all over their faces. Why? Why are they out there? Why are they paying money to look like complete goofballs for an hour?

Matt had interrupted me a few minutes ago to see what I was doing. I told him what I was writing about. He seemed a little shocked by my confusion – maybe a little offended by it, too. In his opinion, the guys in the clinic were doing something great – they were trying to get better at something they had fun doing. They still had fun with it even though they were horrible at it. That concept is so foreign to me. I've always had a horrible time doing something I knew I couldn't do well. Huh, "couldn't" do well. Maybe I am a defeatist. I always thought that if I couldn't do something well, then I'd never be able to do it well. And when I do it, I feel miserable because I know I'm no good. Even when I'm out there in practices with them, I know it doesn't mean anything and that I'm just supposed to have fun with it, but I don't. I feel absolutely miserable because I know I look like an idiot. And the crazy thing is that I actually try to play hockey out there – I want to do well – God knows why. But, the more I try, the worse I seem to play. And, I just become more frustrated. It's a vicious cycle, and I'm aware now that it happens in almost everything I do – dancing, drawing, games, writing. If I'm not good at it, then it's not fun to do. I don't know if I've ever done anything that I suck at and had fun with it. I take everything – even fun stuff – very seriously. Jeez, Crystal, how do you think people – including yourself – learn anything. Yet, these guys don't do that. Maybe that's my story.

So many different types of guys. Some raised on hockey. Some have never seen a game until they were adults. Yet, they've found something in hockey. A release, hobby, exercise, a change of pace, or a break in their ordinary, demanding lives? They come every game day just to play. They know they're not that good and that maybe this will be the best they'll ever do at hockey. But, they don't care. They play for fun. They play for the game. Not because they're good. Not because they have hopes of making it. Some of them have already made it to where they'll be in their lives. And for those who are just starting out in their careers, they know that they probably won't make it in hockey, but at least they keep playing anyway.

Matt says it's a challenge – a test of character. It amazes me. It's a motivation. It's a testament that even the challenges in life are worth enduring, and if looked upon in the right way, the journey on the road to being better can actually be fun.

Only got about 2/3 of a period on film. Karen, who just recently wed #10 Tony Smith, walked in and started talking to me. I hate not giving someone my full attention when they're speaking to me, so the project suffered. Too bad. The Shams won 12 to something really low. I gotta get a hold of myself. Got to keep project's importance in mind.

Matt's ribs started to hurt last week. He probably pulled a muscle from ice hockey. He was in serious pain almost the entire game, but he still played. I hope it's not a cracked rib.

October 23, 1999

The Shamrocks have been outstanding in the past two weeks. They've beaten all their opponents by impressive margins. They've done so well that management has decided to move them up to a more advanced league (the "B" or "silver" league). Today is their championship game. They're playing the Killer Fish who beat the "redneck" Predators – the most aggressive team in the league.

November 12, 1999

Tonight, Shams moved up to the B league. Nerves escalated at the thought of facing a tougher, faster opponent. At first, it looked like they'd have to wait another week. The other team hadn't shown up. A forfeit was decided, but the team that played before agreed to give the Shams some ice time. After the first period of scrimmage, the forfeited team showed up ready to play. Unfairly, the game started. The Shams' first "B League" opponent was the Vipers.

Despite the nerves and the exhaustion from the pre-game scrimmage, the Shams did better than I think they expected. Many players rose to the new challenge, especially #10 Tony Smith. His clumsy footwork doesn't hinder his impressive style and instinct. He has an uncanny knack of knowing where the puck and his teammates are at all times. Off the ice, his is quiet and private, usually avoiding locker-room conversation. He dresses alone and quickly goes off to meet his wife. But on the ice, he's one of the guys – a real asset to his teammate. And the guys love him.

Shams lost 5-8.

Windshield view – rain – wipers (9)	Ever notice how your mind wanders while you're driving? Especially on long drives? You think of the weirdest things. I used to imagine plots for stories I'd write...real creepy highway stories with a twilight zone twist. But, I haven't written one yet. God knows how many stories I've thought of.
Me driving car (1)	That's me. Crystal Alexander. I'm a 22 year-old college senior. And I'm on my way home to visit family and friends.
- New Orleans signs (9)	They live in New Orleans and Mississippi.
- Tennessee welcome sign (9)	I moved to Tennessee four years ago.
	So I try to visit them as often as I can.
Mile gage. (9) - traffic - wrecked car. / cop	It's a 597.8 mile-long, monotonous drive that has all sorts of nasty possibilities.
Show Luke playing with camera (3)	But the rewards are worth it.
Show mom: "Yeah! Get out the car, Crystal!" (9)	And it's always an interesting homecoming me in the car.	So why am I telling you this? As I mentioned before, my mind often wanders on these trips.
us watching TV me talking to Craig 2 guys w/ orange shirts	I often think about people. People I know People I don't know.

Derrick's friends	One thing I noticed about people is that they usually tend to hang out with others who look like them. Beautiful women have beautiful friends Jocks hang out with jocks. And larger folk also tend to gravitate towards one another.
	Another thing is that you rarely see a great difference in age between friends or companions.
	Unless, of course, they're related.
	It's odd to think that the men and women people like best are the ones who most resemble themselves.
	Might explain prejudice (ADD MORE) For some reason, people just can't tolerate others who are different from them.
me in car?	Another thing I used to think about on my trips was what I would do for my senior thesis project. It was a big pain in the ass that I wasn't looking forward to. So, I didn't like to think about it too much. Mostly, I just complained about it.

Matt shoots Matt + gun.	One night, I had gripped so much about what I going to do for this project that
Matt sets face-off (45)	My boyfriend, Matt, jokingly suggested that I do an extensive study on his roller hockey team
	He said that I should present the team as a gradual blossom of outstanding athleticism and sportsmanship.
CU Matt • making too. (37)	Of course, he was only kidding.
47	But, as ideas ran out, Matt's suggestion looked better and better.
(63) Derrick falls blocking pass (44)	Not because they were such a great team They could actually use a little practice
	But because the players on the team are so different from one another.
Derrick (43)	There are big guys...
	And smaller ones...
Dave (40)	They have young players

all Craig	And older ones...
	And some who are conservative...
Just flicking hair	And some who aren't so conservative...
	Also, they are guys on the team who have been playing for several years.
Dustin's [↗] breakthrough	while Why some guys have never even played hockey before.

opponent's team all kids.	This thought intrigued me. Don't people usually like to work better with others who are more like them?
	So as usual, Matthew conquered my heart, and I decided to do my project on his roller hockey team.

There are ten of them. They come from different backgrounds and lead different lives. Some have wives and children. Others are just starting college. But all of them are united by their love for one game – hockey. And on one night a week, they put their differences aside and together they become – the Shamrocks. Graphic* / Graphic*
Most of the players met for the first time here – at the Ice Chalet
For their first season, the Shamrocks started in the lowest league – called the Bronze league Matt Mahoney was the coach. His younger brother, Pat, was the captain.
In spite of the varying skill levels, and the fact that some of the players were complete strangers, the season started out well. They won half their games.	"Learning to Fly."
But the Shamrock Luck was tricky. The following season, they lost every game.
But the next season, the Shamrocks won every game including the championship.
By this third season, they had become better hockey players Learned things they never though they would do.

And they learned more about each other's lives.
What was important to each of them.
...And the things that weren't.
They learned who liked to fight...
...and who didn't.
They began to defend each other.
They became a unit. They laughed together. Suffered together. And celebrated together.
And, as most men who play sports do, they made fun of each other.
More apparent, they learned how to care about one another.
It was obvious the Shamrocks had definitely merged and become a force.
In the next season, they would move up a level to the silver league and face younger, faster, better hockey players. Will the Shamrocks be able to keep up? And will their friendship survive either way?
Graphic *

After two seasons in the B league, the Shamrocks still have not won one game.
And the tension is thickening.
But, they're still sticking together.
Out of the ten, only two have left the team.
Number 31, Greg Warren left to play goalie for another team.
And number 10, Tony Smith, decided to take a season off to move into a new house and enjoy married life for a little while. But he promised to return next season.
Will the Shamrocks still be there?
Probably.
In spite of their losing streak, And in spite of their differences, Each still maintains a love for hockey. And it is this love for the game that is the most cohesive bond for the men who play it.

The Game

GRAPHIC

The beginning (-graphic)

Most of the ~~Shamrocks~~^{players} met for the first time
here at the Ice Chalet

- warm-ups.

- Matt, Bob, Red.

int. w/ Matt + Denick, decided to put a team
together

Matt, Den⁰⁵, Craig, Tony, Dave.

- Matt calling it the Shamrocks.

~~For their first season,~~

~~After the~~ For their first season, the Shamrocks started.

in the lowest league - the Bronze League.

Matt Makoway was the coach. His younger brother Pat was the captain

- All Matt:

- All Pat.

In spite of the varying skill levels, and the fact that some of the players were complete strangers, they started out well. They won half ~~their~~^{of their} games.

- Denick / Dave decide winning first game in shoot-out.

the Shamrock duck was tricky

But ~~their track~~ ran out quickly. ~~and for~~ The following season - they did ~~not~~ ^{win} ~~there~~ gone.

But the next season, the Shamrocks won every game including the championship.

They had definitely united and become a force.

They had become better hockey ~~Not only had their~~ players skills improved, but their ~~commitment~~ ship

~~Throughout the previous~~ ~~year and a half, they~~ ^{became} ~~became~~ better hockey players

~~And better friend~~

- learned things they never thought they would do.
- And they learned more about each other's lives.

What was important to each of them

And the things that weren't
Who liked to fight...
And who didn't...

- score boards

- score boards

- score boards

- dependent players.

- shamrocks goals (3)

- happy sham

quick cut)

- Tony's marriage / relationship w/ Chris.

- Matt and Pat at Tony's wedding.

- Munsays

- OJ / Tony's

And they learned how to care about each other.

They ~~begin~~ began to defend
~~each other~~ each ~~other~~ other.

They became a unit.

They laughed ^{like} together, suffered together, + celebrated together.

~~And~~ And, ~~the~~ most men who play sports, they made fun of each other.

It was obvious

The Shamrocks had definitely merged and become a force.

In the next season, they would up ~~the~~ a level to the silver league. and face younger, faster, better hockey.
Will the Shamrocks be able to keep up? And will their friendship survive either way?

THE CHALLENGE

After ~~the~~ two seasons in the B league, the Shamrocks still have not won one game.

And the tension is thickening.

~~But they stick together~~

~~and~~ But they're still sticking together.

Out of ~~the~~ the ten, only two have left the team.

#31 Greg Warren left to play goalie for another team.

and #10 Tony Smith decided to take a season off to move into a new home and enjoy married life for a little while. But he promised to return next season.
