James E. Lawler, professor of psychology, has not slowed down since he became a faculty member in 1975. During his time at UT, he has served fifteen years as department head, helped bring technology-driven teaching to UT, and received grants adding up to more than $3 million in today's dollars. In his research, he created a successful animal model for hypertension study. The

was established by students, colleagues, and friends of the longtime head of the botany department and former dean of the College of Arts and Sciences to reward exceptional teaching and service.
