minority membership as one of the criteria for favorable consideration for financial support in our standard letter to all students inquiring about the program. Other than this, we have no special procedures for recruiting Black students.

5. What is your conception of affirmative action?

Affirmative action, as I understand it, refers to positive, visible signs of attempts to recruit minority individuals.

6. What is your impression of the relations between students and faculty?

There are few minority students in our program. The relationship between faculty and students appears to cover the same general range of relationships that is found among White students. Campus wide, I would assume from letters published in the Beacon and other reports that Black students have more concerns about overt and covert discriminatory practices than White students and more than is realized by most faculty members.
