POSTING OF CHARTERS ON MUNICIPAL WEB SITES NOW REQUIRED

Josh Jones, Legal Consultant

The Internet is the most useful tool for promoting effective democracy since Gutenberg's printing press. And as our communities rely increasingly on the Internet as their primary source of information, our consideration of Web sites as a primary repository of public information is critical to an informed electorate. For years federal and state governments have taken steps to require an increasing amount of public and governmental information be accessible via the Internet. Following inevitably in lockstep are similar requirements for local governments.

Recognition of this by the Tennessee Legislature occurred late last month with the passage of Public Chapter No. 808. This act requires each Tennessee municipality and county to post, no later than Jan. 1, 2009, its charter of incorporation on a Web site maintained by the municipality or county. If no such Web site is maintained, the charter must be posted on the Tennessee secretary of state's Web site.

A local charter is the legislatively granted foundation of every local government. Being the expression of municipal power and responsibility, it is imperative that every resident have unfettered access to a charter's contents. Charters are, of course, open to public inspection under our state's open records laws. T.C.A. §§ 10-7-501 et seq. Hence, this new requirement is merely an extension of an already existing duty to make public records readily available to your constituents. Logistically, this should pose no significant expenditure of time or resources to city personnel. There are currently electronic copies of the charters of every Tennessee city posted on the MTAS Web site.

If you have any questions or require assistance in obtaining or posting an electronic copy of your charter, please contact your MTAS management consultant. If your city does not maintain its own Web site and you need assistance posting your charter on the secretary of state's Web site, contact Robert Greene, publications liaison, at (615) 253-4571 or robert.a.greene@state.tn.us.
