Ball State University
Graduate Programs in Composition and Literature

The Program

Ball State University offers graduate programs in composition and literature leading to the M.A. and the Ph.D. Although students concentrate in either area, they are encouraged to explore the connections between the composing process, the history of rhetoric, literary theory, pedagogy, and various literary traditions. Students are actively mentored in the development of publication, teaching, and other professional skills.

The Stipends

Graduate and doctoral assistants in English receive competitive stipends and waivers of all tuition except for fees. Assistants participate in a variety of professional experiences: teaching composition, working with faculty members on research projects, supervising tutors, assisting in computer-aided instruction, and working in program administration. The Graduate School offers a limited number of service-free fellowships to outstanding candidates.

The University

A state-supported institution with a current enrollment of about 20,000 students, Ball State University first achieved eminence in teacher education. The Department of English features nationally recognized faculty, well-equipped computer and learning laboratories, and additional graduate concentrations in applied linguistics and TESOL.

Information

Ball State University practices equal opportunity in education and employment and is strongly and actively committed to diversity within its community.

Original essays examining the emergence, evolution, and consequences of book publishing in composition studies are sought for a collection titled Book Culture in Composition Studies. The editors are interested in contributions that address the rise of the book in composition scholarship from theoretical perspectives (e.g., materialist, feminist, multicultural), various locations in the academic hierarchy (e.g., graduate students, adjunct faculty, tenure-track and tenured faculty) and the publishing industry (commercial and academic presses), and in relation to composition's institutional, departmental, and disciplinary history. Possible topics might include the following: book culture and the teaching/research binary; books as material social practice; the effect of book culture on academic journals; books and tenure requirements; local and/or disciplinary definitions of "the book"; book culture and alternative discourses; the role of edited collections in composition studies; the politics of university and commercial presses; the incredible shrinking academic book; book culture and the dissertation; the nature of book reviewing in composition studies; book culture and digital scholarship; book culture and academic power relations; and composition's book culture as an expression of wider developments in the Humanities. Send one copy of a 1 pg., single-spaced proposal, or full-length essay, by January 15, 2004 to Peter Vandenberg, Department of English, DePaul University, McGaw Hall, Chicago, IL 60614; and to Laura Micciche, Department of English, East Carolina University, Greenville, NC 27858.
