The editors and review board are proud to present the Spring 2013 issue of Pursuit, the Journal of Undergraduate Research. Like each previous issue, the Spring 2013 issue is notable in a variety of ways. We are pleased to incorporate two engineering papers for the first time, and we received many more science submissions for this issue than we have in the past. While there is always room for growth and expansion, we hope to continue this trend in order to keep Pursuit as diverse as possible and to expand to include all colleges and disciplines across the University of Tennessee.

As always, I would like to thank my hard-working review board and my co-editors, Maggi Hume and Madelyn Crawford. Their assistance is invaluable and the excellent work that they have done is apparent in the quality of this issue.

As a graduating senior, this will be the last issue of Pursuit that I will preside over as Editor-in-Chief. I am honored to have been a part of such a publication and to have been able to promote the excellent research performed by undergraduates at UT. I feel confident that Pursuit will continue to grow and flourish in the years to come.
