"Not too many years ago I was standing in a cold, blowing rain waiting for free government cheese to feed my children. The future looked as bleak as that December day. I had a dream of a better life and a determination to do whatever I could to climb out of that despairing situation. I have been very fortunate in my journey. It seems God gave me not only fantastic hiking boots but also generous helping hands which have lifted and pulled me over the truly rough spots. Hard work, obstacles and challenges are expected and welcomed. But I will be eternally grateful for the friends and complete strangers like yourself who have helped in so many ways. In so doing you have shown confidence in my ability to succeed, and that is as important to me as the money you have so graciously awarded me."

Those words are taken from a letter written by a student scholarship recipient to one of our donors, but similar ones could have been written by any number of the outstanding men and women presently enrolled in the College. In this, the first annual report since I became Dean, I open with them to add my tribute to so many “friends and complete strangers” who have shown pride, appreciation, and confidence in the mission and program of the College.

One of the abiding strengths of the College is the support we receive from persons not associated with the day-to-day operation of the institution. As we strive to improve while maintaining the traditions and excellence already existing, that continued support is essential.

Reports on academic matters, admissions, alumni affairs, career services, development activities, and student affairs can be found on the following pages. As much as we can in the limited space available, we have tried to give you a flavor of the activities of the past year.

An enthusiastic College community, comprised of approximately 450 students and 80 faculty and staff, has worked hard to make the College the vital, effective educational and public service entity described in these pages. In order to achieve that goal, we continue to concentrate on our instructional mission. During the coming years, we will maintain that enthusiasm as we extend our efforts to make you even more proud to be associated with the College.

The College of Law has earned its reputation as a fine regional law school because of its commitment to excellent teaching and its sound record of scholarship and public service. Necessarily, the bulk of additions to the state budget over the past few years has been used to achieve that status.

A year ago, the College of Law’s budget document began with the words: “Momentum is very important for the College of Law...” That document lauded the previous three years’ developments and, with the admonition that the considerable momentum enjoyed during that time was fragile, prescribed a three-year plan to continue the College’s growth and development. The specific means to achieve that growth—attracting and retaining outstanding faculty and students, improving our curriculum and teaching, and providing superior service to our different public constituencies—continue as our focus.

In its recent consideration of where we go from here, the faculty debated whether emphasis should now be placed on better students, defined as those with higher numerical predictors, more select undergraduate feeder schools, more diversity of student interests and makeup or some combination of these factors and others. They also asked themselves whether a faculty more involved and more broadly recognized in legal education and the profession for its scholarship and related activities might best contribute the necessary impetus to our development.

There was also the suggestion that more recognition and support from our other constituencies—other campus colleagues, Tennessee lawyers, judges and other alumni—might more clearly contribute to the fulfillment of the ideal.
To the extent that a single sentiment emerged, it was that we not divert our energies in such a way that the momentum referred to above is lost. The conclusion was that all of the suggestions for strengthening the law school must be pursued if we are to continue to enjoy our good reputation and retain a solid foundation upon which to build.

We continue to examine new, special programs with the understanding that we should not expect major infusions of state money for new programs without some demonstration of the feasibility of the success of the programs and their potential for true excellence.

Our short term initiatives are a reflection of these premises. We continue to recognize as the highest priority the training of persons who are especially well prepared to serve the needs of the state of Tennessee for well-trained advocates, practitioners, and public servants.

To that end, we begin the Fall 1988 semester with our updated and refined curriculum. In addition, a planning committee has been constituted and charged with the formulation of a statement of vision for the law school, describing the institution as we would like it to be five years and ten years hence.

The committee, chaired by Dean Richard Wirtz, is composed of Professors Jerry Black, Tom Davies, Amy Hess, Bob Lloyd, Cheryn Picquet, and John Sobieski. They have been warned not to restrict their report to modest meliorations of the present situation on which almost everyone would concur, but to range widely, and to pose a challenge to us for the future.

I take this opportunity to invite your input. I will be an active participant in the committee's work, and I welcome your direct communication to me of your vision for the College.

We think we have mastered the fundamentals. We continue to excel in the areas of classroom teaching and scholarly publication. Our faculty and staff render indispensable public service on local, state, national, and international levels. We continue to attract the best and brightest students from Tennessee and the mid-South region. Our graduates are sought by employers not just in Tennessee, but around the country, indeed around the world.

The University's central administration has demonstrated that they recognize our need for increased faculty and student support and improved facilities. We realize that many of our shortcomings, mainly in those areas of faculty and student support and facilities, will need to be addressed by successful, effective development activities, while others can be overcome by sheer dedication and hard work.

As we approach the centennial celebration of the founding of the University of Tennessee College of Law, we accept the challenges inherent in entering a new era. We thank you for your support in the past, and we welcome your input and support as we move forward.

Admissions Report:
Applications Abound!

The national trend towards increased interest in law school is evident at the University of Tennessee College of Law as we prepare for the Fall term. Applications for a seat in the entering class have increased by 17% over last year.

This sudden surge in applications caught many law schools by surprise. In August, law schools throughout the nation were predicting that their entering classes would be “a little larger” in 1988 than in previous years. It appeared unlikely that students on waiting lists would be admitted to the law schools of their choice. At UT-K, we expected to follow the national trend in both respects.

The volume of applications to UT College of Law increased from 677 in 1987 to 791 in 1988. The most dramatic increase was in the percentage of Tennessee residents applying for admission, 431 in 1988 as compared with 332 in 1987, excluding minorities. This is an increase of approximately 30%.

During the 1987-88 school year, we engaged in an extensive recruiting campaign, seeking the finest students available. This campaign included visits by faculty members and the Assistant Dean for Admissions to approximately 40 undergraduate campuses throughout the Southeast. The faculty and administration personally contacted many of the most promising students.

These efforts are reflected in the improved credentials of members of this year’s entering class and in the higher percentage of admissions offers which were accepted. Although students have chosen to apply to a greater number of law schools in recent years, 52% of all admission offers for this Fall were accepted. The average acceptance rate over the previous three years was 45%.

We have also continued our efforts to recruit minority students. There was a 14% increase in applications from minorities in 1988. Minority enrollment for this Fall is projected at 9% of the total student body.

Students who are attracted to the study of law at the University of Tennessee are a diverse group. Last year’s entering class was comprised of students from 65 different undergraduate institutions and 39 different undergraduate majors, including the traditional ones such as political science, business administration, and history as well as chemical and polymer engineering, the classics, the performing arts, and industrial relations.

Ten members of that entering class already held advanced degrees, including one Ph.D. in Chemistry, one M.D., and two M.B.A.’s. Most of the students came from Tennessee schools (110), and UT-Knoxville was the leading feeder school, contributing 50 members to the Fall 1987 entering class.

The Fall 1988 class is shaping up to be equally diverse, representing 75 different undergraduate schools. Tennessee schools graduated 113 of the members of this class, 48 of whom earned their undergraduate degree at UT-Knoxville.

As we ponder where we can find classrooms large enough to handle the first-year classes, we cannot help but be pleased with such a delightful dilemma.

East Tennessee Meets West Germany

As the second installment in an on-going exchange program with the University of Bonn, West Germany, faculty from the Rheinische Friedrich Wilhelms University spent 12 days last Fall discovering the wonders of the Eastern United States and East Tennessee.

Their visit included five days of presentations on various topics concerning the law and the environment, from water management to the clean-up of waste dump sites. The various programs featured Professor Doctors Jurgen Salzwedel, Jost Pietzcher, Wilfried Feldenkirchen, Wolfgang Freiherr von Marschall, and Hans-Ulrich Paeffgen. Research Associates Berthold Viertel and Hans Hermann Nacke also delivered papers.

Moot Court Board Active

The Eastern Division of the Tennessee Court of Appeals held forth in the Moot Court Room of the College of Law in October to give our students a flavor of appellate practice. In addition to coordinating the intra-school appellate and trial moot court competitions, the Advocates’ Prize and the Ray H. Jenkins Trial Competitions, Chairperson Julie Taylor and the members of the Moot Court Board assisted a number of inter-school teams: Jessup International Law Moot Court Team, Constitutional Law Moot Court Team, Stetson Tax Moot Court Team, and the National Trial Team. And as usual, UT was well-represented in the National Moot Court Competition.

Old and “New” Traditions Thrive

Student Bar Association, under the leadership of Chloe Reid, kept up the perennial law school traditions such as Chilla and the Alan Novak Student Loan Fund Auction, as well as newer ones such as the Advocates’ Ball. Law Follies found a very musical Professor Jerry Phillips in prison garb, along with Editor-in-Chief of the Law Review John Tishler among others of note.

More than 30 law students and area attorneys and teachers trained some 150 high school students for the Knoxville area Mock Trial Competition, whose champion (Doyle High School) came in second in the statewide event. The Entertainment and Sports Law Symposium was a tremendous media attraction, especially with the visit of Hustler magazine editor Larry Flynt.

The staff of the Tennessee Law Review and the Tennessee Judicial Newsletter were as busy as ever, working on one deadline after the other, ever mindful of the burdens and the rewards of editorship. Nashville attorney and sometime movie star Fred Thompson gave the annual Tennessee Law Review Banquet address.

40 years of clinical education at the University of Tennessee were celebrated last November by current and former staff and students of our Legal Clinic, one of the oldest of its kind in the nation. Its founding director, Charles H. Miller, was also honored as a pioneer in the field of legal assistance for indigents and innovative legal education.

Faculty Activities Contribute to the Profession

A sampling of our faculty activities over the past year reveal an extensive array of service to the state and the nation, legal education, and legal scholarship.

For example, Neil Cohen has been to Nashville more times than he might care to count working with the Tennessee Supreme Court’s Advisory Committee on Civil Procedure and its proposed new Evidence Code for Tennessee and serving as an ad hoc member of the Tennessee Sentencing Commission. Grayfred Gray has drafted mental health legislation and served as an advisor to Tennessee legislators on mental health issues.

In the national spotlight, Jerry Phillips testified before Congress on the issue of federal products liability legislation, and James Kirby was a principal speaker in a Presidential Showcase program at the 1988 Annual Meeting of the American Bar Association in San Francisco.

International recognition was due Ndiva Kofele-Kale and Dean Hill Rivkin. Ndiva presented a paper on international trade law in Seoul, Korea, and Dean delivered a paper on environmental impact assessment in West Germany.

Our faculty are prominent in the Association of American Law Schools: Susan Kovac is chair-elect of the Section on Clinical Legal Education;
Grayfred Gray is chair of the Section on Teaching Law Outside Law School; John Sebert serves on the Executive Committee of the Remedies Section; Amy Hess is a member of the Executive Committee of the Section of Donative Transfers; and Tom Eisele was the luncheon speaker for an AALS Conference on Professional Responsibility.

They have contributed to the profession by the spoken word as well as the pen, as illustrated by such addresses as tort reform and AIDS testing by Carol Mutter, physician malpractice by Joe King, religion in the public schools by Fred Le Clercq, and techniques for deciding arbitration cases by Pat Hardin.

Continuing education is a pleasurable service we strive to offer. Dividing the College of Trial Advocacy, our mainstay continuing legal education program, into two sections was the successful brainchild of planning chair Gary Anderson. Bill Beintema and the Law Library faculty and staff hosted the American Association of Law Libraries' pre-convention Institute on Basic Law Cataloguing.

A significant percentage of our faculty are active as shakers and movers in professional and community groups, including Reba Best, Julie Hardin, Ruth Hill, Mary Jo Hoover, Cheryn Picquet, and Doug Wells, just to name a few.

Dean Marilyn Yarbrough has probably set a record for the number of speeches made and service positions held during one year. She also completed a two-year stint as President of the Law School Admissions Council.

The academic program receives direct benefits from our faculty's endeavors. Tom Davies has developed a new seminar on the topic of the Exclusionary Rule, and Carl Pierce is working on a new Government Contracting course. Susan Kovac and Nicki Russler have prepared a Civil Clinic Handbook to guide clinical students, and Bob Lloyd has compiled teaching materials for his Commercial Law Seminar. Innovative teaching methods are constantly being introduced with our students, in step (and often ahead of) the nation's best legal minds.

Alumni Affairs: Perspective from the Past

There are now almost 5,000 living alumni of this school. That's a long way from the 9 students who comprised the first class in the Spring of 1890.

The idea for establishing a law department came from our first dean, Thomas J. Freeman. This former Justice of the Tennessee Supreme Court wrote a letter to UT’s President, Charles W. Dabney, proposing to conduct a law course for the University.

Freeman proposed that the department follow a semi-independent financial life, with the fees being used to pay instructional salaries. This idea appealed to Dabney at the time, and Freeman became the Dean as well as the only faculty member on February 13, 1890.

“A good education in English” and 19 years of age were the only admission requirements during the early years. The objectives for the Law Department, as stated by its first Dean, were:

“First, to educate and train thoroughly young men who propose to practice the law in a knowledge of the elements of learning of the profession; second, to give a knowledge of the practice by moot courts, preparation and pleading, etc., so that they may be able to enter upon their practice with some experience in these essential matters; and third, to continue to labor to elevate the standing of professional learning.”

Tuition was $100 a year plus other University fees.

Those first students met with Freeman in a law office in downtown Knoxville until they moved into North College in September of that same year. It was a two-year program, the first of such advanced requirements in this geographic region. Those who had previously “read law” with a practicing attorney or who did extra work might graduate in one year. The Law Department itself granted a license to practice law upon the completion of coursework.

By reason of his vigor and independent thought, Dean Freeman became known as the “great dissenter”. Unfortunately, his ill health forced his resignation before the end of the first year, but he started a tradition of quality legal education which has withstood the test of a century.

A special time in our history is coming soon, with the 100th anniversary of the College to be celebrated in 1989-90. The above material is excerpted from a comprehensive history of the school currently being prepared. There will be special events during the year, a new alumni directory, and an alumni survey. All should help to give us a fresh perspective and a vision for the future.

Our alumni ARE our past and will be our future, and as such can offer a collective perspective on where we have been and where we should be going.

In 1987-88, a record number of alumni gathered together in the four major metropolitan areas of the state to make the acquaintance of our new Dean. Even more locations are planned for the coming year, increasing the opportunities for our alumni to become involved in the life of our school.

Significant Developments in 1987-88

The George S. and Helen P. Child, Jr. Scholarship:

Mr. and Mrs. Child have pledged $10,000 to establish a scholarship in their name to accompany the scholarship named in honor of his parents, George S. and Helen M. Child, Sr. A bequest from Helen M. Child's estate has increased the Child, Sr. endowment by about $6,000 this past year. George S. Child, Sr. and his sons George, John, and Robert all graduated from the UT College of Law.

James Henry Burke Scholarship:

A scholarship for junior or senior law students has been established by a $59,600 bequest from the estate of Marianne Redford Turpin Burke.

The Walter L. Lusk Scholarship:

$20,000 in gifts from Donald and Catherine Lusk have created a scholarship in honor of Mr. Lusk's father, a 1955 alumnus. The scholarship will be awarded to students who demonstrate financial need and are in good academic standing, with a preference for Hamilton County residents.

George D. Montgomery Advocacy Fund:

The Knoxville firm of Kennerly, Montgomery & Finley has contributed more than $5,000 towards a $25,000 pledge to establish an endowment in memory of a founding partner in the firm and 1941 alumnus, George D. Montgomery. Funds from the endowment will support trial and appellate advocacy activities at the College.

$50,000 Gift from Alumni Couple:

Steven A. Irving and his wife, Elizabeth J. Williams, both Class of '77, have given the College of Law 8,000 shares of stock valued at a total of nearly $50,000. These Oak Ridge residents have designated that the gift be used where needed most, as determined by the Dean.

James L. Powers III Award for Excellence in Criminal Advocacy:

Friends and family of James L. Powers III have established an award in memory of this student who was killed in an automobile accident during his third year of study. To recognize his outstanding work in the Legal Clinic, the Powers award will be presented annually in the form of a cash prize to a student who excels in the clinical program with criminal case emphasis. This award will be in addition to the Charles H. Miller Award for Excellence in Civil Advocacy.

The Law Library at the University of Tennessee provides a variety of services to library users, from reference assistance and inter-library loans to computers and computerized data searches. In addition, the collection continues to grow despite increasing publication costs.

A new, part-time professional reference librarian should be on staff before the end of the Fall 1988 semester. He or she will assist users in the evenings and on weekends. WESTLAW and LEXIS both are available for students and faculty, and WESTLAW is available on a commercial, fee-paying basis to members of the bar.

As shown in the five-year comparison chart, the Law Library's collection now includes over 290,000 volumes and microform equivalents, representing a 20% increase over a five-year period. The acquisitions budget has grown by 50% in the same time period, illustrating the tremendous impact of publication costs on our ability to increase the size of the collection. Nevertheless, our collection remains the largest of any law library in the state of Tennessee.

The computer age has a powerful impact on the Law Library, beyond the valuable retrieval services of WESTLAW and LEXIS. A computerized reference service called Info-Trac offers information on secondary materials such as law review and newspaper articles, as well as the government publications index. Three computer terminals are available for access to the University's mainframe computers and the University-wide on-line catalog.

Library users need access to the rapidly expanding body of available databases, research systems, and software. Plans are underway in the coming year for computer research and instruction laboratories to take advantage of the exciting innovations being made around the nation in legal research and instruction techniques.

The old and the new:
Career Services Are In Demand

Not long ago, a reminiscing alumnus wandered through the newly-decorated Career Services suite during our traditional Homecoming weekend Open House.

"Things have really changed since I was in school," he remarked as he looked over the job boards and admired the interview rooms with windows, upholstered chairs, and works of art. "When I was here, if an attorney needed a clerk or an associate, he might just call the dean and ask him to recommend somebody."

This office’s services now include: orientation seminars, career counseling, on-campus interviewing, interview arrangements, off-campus consortia, resume-forwarding to firms unable to come to campus, and position listings. In addition, the two-person office publishes the annual Lawyers of the Future picturebook, a monthly alumni placement newsletter, and coordinates temporary research assignments for students through STAT.

So that our alumni will receive reciprocal services from other schools’ placement offices, our Career Services office also shares its resources with alumni of other schools upon written request of his or her school’s placement office.

The demands made by students and alumni on the Law College’s placement/career counseling office, and on its counterparts around the nation, have increased dramatically in recent years.

The expanding versatility of the doctor of jurisprudence degree demands that we encourage students to begin to gather information about themselves, and the profession, early in their academic careers. This helps them choose an ultimate career goal and prepare for it.

There is also a trend toward the hiring of first-year students as summer associates and increased requests for help from alumni seeking lateral moves.

So that they can become acclimated to the study of law, first-year students are not allowed to interview on campus, or even to register with the Career Services office, until after their first semester. In January of their first year, we hold first-year orientation sessions.

In the past, our message has been: Start thinking about your career goals and prepare a resume for Fall recruiting, but if you do not want to clerk this Summer, that’s fine; it may be your last Summer to lie on the beach.

However, we have experienced a new flurry of activity in February caused by the arrival of recruiters who wish to see only first-year students. This has prompted most of the first-year class to initiate their job search much earlier than in the past. Indications are that at least half, perhaps more, of the students completing their first year held legal positions this past Summer. When finding a job by the second semester of the first year becomes a paramount concern, there is concern among the nation’s academic community of further encroachment on the academic process by the legal recruiting industry.

Alumni requests for help in making lateral moves become alarming only when the number and nature of those requests exceed our capacity to be of service. Our primary service to alumni is the distribution of a monthly newsletter, entitled “Alumni Employment Opportunities”, to about 275 subscribers. Feedback says it works.

Within the past year alone, 75 alumni have also registered with the Career Services office so that we can forward their resumes to potential employers in certain categories. The largest number are alumni who graduated since 1982, although 13 earlier classes are represented. Unfortunately, time limitations prohibit close attention to this effort.

Newsletter job listings reveal that the primary demand in lateral moves is for attorneys with 0-3 or 3-5 years experience. Alumni who graduated 7-10 years ago find that making such a move is much more difficult. Despite this, corporate takeover, firm mergers, and the like, as well as mid-life searches for new career meaning, are sending even some 20-year veterans into the marketplace and to our doors.

It will be a challenge to determine how we can best serve our growing constituency. While the faculty-student ratio has reached an attractive 17:1, the Career Services-constituents ratio appears to be about 300:1!
