MTAS Delivers Customer Service Training

OVER 170 PARTICIPANTS ATTENDED the Customer Service for Frontline Employees training in four locations across Tennessee. Dr. P. J. Snodgrass, with the Municipal Technical Advisory Service (MTAS), presented this interactive four-hour class that provided training on techniques and skills frontline employees can use to handle the most difficult customers.

The class was a collaborative effort between MTAS and its sister agency the County Technical Assistance Service (CTAS). The participants heard how cities and counties have much the same issues when dealing with an irate customer. The class included interaction that allowed city and county employees to talk about their own experiences and share knowledge and many interesting stories. A video of customer service scenarios in a municipal setting provided excellent examples of how to handle difficult customers effectively and positively.

Classes were held in Kingsport, Knoxville, Jackson and Franklin in order to meet the needs of MTAS customers across the state. Some participants comments about what they liked most were: “The interaction and hearing other cities’ or counties’ situations and how they handle the problem” and “It was fun and I learned more about myself and how to interact with people.”

Mr. Thomas,

I just completed the CMFO program and I wanted to share with you how much I thoroughly enjoyed the program and will recommend it to other individuals within the city of Memphis. Kay Stegall and Sharee Brewer were exceptional instructors. They were always willing to go the extra mile to ensure that the class obtained a complete understanding of the information being presented. They were always willing to help and often went beyond the call of duty in providing examples of how we can incorporate various aspects of the program into our municipalities. Without the help of these two individuals, I do not think I would have been successful in completing the program. Once again, thanks for sharing your awesome employees with us.

Close the Door!
By MTAS Fire Management Consultant
Dennis Wolf

THE STATE FIRE MARSHAL’S OFFICE RECOMMENDS that when you go to sleep at night you close the door. A closed door can slow down the progress of a fire inside a home. The closed door is a barrier for smoke and heat and can provide precious time to enable you and your loved ones to escape the home safely and help control the fire.

Close the Door! is what State Fire Marshal Gary West is telling Tennesseans in an effort to save more lives if a fire should occur.

“A door is one of the best pieces of firefighting and lifesaving equipment,” West said. “If you leave a room that is on fire, simply closing the door behind you can be the best decision you make.”

Closing the door reduces fire growth, slows the spread of the fire inside the structure, limits damage to your home, and could possibly save lives. If you are in a home or building and a fire starts, close the doors on your way out. This will slow down the progress of the fire and could help reduce property damage.

JUSTIN HOLLAND BELIEVES IN PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT and has a great story to tell about how he and his staff benefitted from training offered by MTAS and CTAS. Earlier this year, Justin contacted MTAS and requested a series of three Municipal Management Academy (MMA) programs for his staff at the city of Chattanooga Wastewater department. Eighteen staff completed all eight of the four-hour courses in MMA Level I in early October. Topics included management, understanding work styles, planning and organizing, human resource overview, performance management, workplace harassment, communication skills and motivation. All classes include group activities and focus on the participants’ own experiences in the workplace. The second group started the academy on October 15th and a third group will start in late January 2015.

Justin’s story goes like this…
When I started with the city of Chattanooga in 2005 as the safety and training coordinator with the public works department, I attended the MTAS Municipal Management Academy Level 1 course scheduled through the Human Resources Department. Following the level one course I was promoted to the city’s sanitation manager and attended the second level of courses. The courses were a great introduction to supervision in a practical application where I was able to share my thoughts and ideas with coworkers and peers. In 2010 I attended a series of technical training sponsored by CTAS to receive a Solid Waste Professional Certification. In 2013 I became deputy administrator for the city of Chattanooga’s department of public works and recognized a need for basic supervisory and technical training throughout the department from crew foremen through senior managers who didn’t frequently deal with complicated personnel matters. As a result of our assessment and from round table discussions with employee groups, I began researching supervisor training opportunities with our human resources department and recalled the value in the training that I’d received from MTAS through the Municipal Management Academy. Our human resources department yielded professional development to the departments and we scheduled all of our supervisory staff who had not attended these training courses to attend and work through the first series. The response from the attendees has been extremely positive and beneficial. We have historically received a great deal of support from MTAS in terms of technical expertise as well as training, and look forward to continuing this type of training for new supervisors. We are already looking for subsequent training opportunities through MTAS for level 2 MMA courses and with the Center for Industrial Services to assist with OSHA training at our wastewater treatment facility. We feel that MTAS has continued to partner with us in research, training, and technical support and we value the relationship we have to reach out to our counterparts working in and with municipal governments. I’m always impressed with the University of Tennessee’s Institute for Public Service and value its continued support.
