SUBJECT: Revised Five-Year Plan

During AY 1998-99 we have been involved in revising the UTK Five-Year Plan that was last approved by the UT Board of Trustees on June 23, 1994. We submitted to the Board in the spring of 1996 a status report on progress made in implementing the goals in the 1994 plan. We have made substantial progress in implementing many of the goals established in the 1994 plan.

The Advisory Committee for Planning and Budget (ACPB) is the primary custodian of the Five-Year Plan and took the lead during 1998 in revision of the 1994 plan. Many members of the campus community beyond the ACPB membership participated in developing the revised plan which we shall refer to as the 1999 plan. The work of these various groups across campus represents a major revision of the 1994 plan. For example, four new areas are included in the 1999 plan, namely research, outreach, information/computing, and international education.

Attached is the edited version of the 1999 plan as produced by ACPB. The editing involved only formatting and consistency of style and did not involve substantive changes of the content. It is now time to have wide review and comment of the 1999 plan. I am asking you as a group to meet and discuss the plan and prepare comments on the plan by July 1, 1999. You may send consensus comments as well as individual comments to Margaret Russell in my office.

The commitment of UTK to planning and allocation of budgets consistent with our primary goals has been noted and lauded by many persons both within and external to the campus. I am committed to our planning being a dynamic process as we strive to utilize our resources in the most effective manner to enhance the quality and reputation of UTK nationally.

Designation of Responsibility

The central mission of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville (UTK), the state's leading public research university, is to provide the environment and atmosphere for the development of the human resource within the context of a local and global community, ecology, and economy. This mission is accomplished through exceptional teaching, scholarship, artistic creation, public service, professional practice, and administration of our own resources. As an institution of higher learning and as a member of the local and global communities, this mission is also accomplished through a humble acceptance of our responsibility to share and develop resources. Each member of the UTK community must be committed to this University's continued quest for excellence. We recognize our joint mission to be a firm commitment to high academic standards and student learning.

Although certain goals described in this plan are clearly the purview of specific offices, each member of the University community shares in the governance of this University and also shares responsibility for achieving each objective stated herein.

Context

UTK is a community of scholars that aspires to create an environment in which every member of that community has the opportunity to achieve his or her full potential. Students should expect a quality education that empowers them as individuals by introducing new ideas, deepening understanding of complex issues, and presenting opportunities to study and work with people from many different cultures and backgrounds. Faculty should expect a professionally and personally satisfying place in which to work, a student body that is receptive to their best efforts, colleagues who are challenging and supportive, and facilities that enhance teaching and research. Staff should expect an environment where they can continue to grow professionally and perform work that is connected to, supportive of, and valued by all members of the campus community. Alumni should expect a highly regarded institution that consistently maintains and enhances its reputation. Prospective employers should expect graduates to be well prepared academically and to have a strong work ethic, including the ability to function effectively as part of a team. The citizens of Tennessee, the nation, and the world should expect the University to be a valuable resource in addressing the problems of society within the global as well as the local community. This community of scholars should perform at such a high and visible level of commitment to artistic, social, economic, political and scientific research, discovery and learning that UTK will increasingly be the university of choice not only for people in the State of Tennessee but for the citizens of the world at large.

The University of Tennessee, Knoxville aspires to be a university of choice. We recognize the central role that staff play in accomplishing the mission of the University. Our desire is to attract and retain the best faculty and staff persons available. Research and creative activity are central to our mission, yet ample evidence shows that UTK's scholarly reputation and research productivity will not be sustained by simply maintaining the status quo. Indeed, our research and creative efforts must embrace a global perspective in order for UTK to fulfill its mission of human development. Thus, the University must devote a concentrated effort both to enhance its research and creative activities and to inform the outside world about its successes in these areas.

The citizens and government of Tennessee expect The University of Tennessee, Knoxville, as a land-grant university, to be a valuable resource to the State of Tennessee, the United States, and the world. Whereas the boundaries of UTK historically were defined by the boundaries of the State, UTK in the twenty-first century observes no physical boundaries, serving our constituents on a global scale. In this context, UTK seeks to increase its commitment to its land-grant mission of service to society by becoming a model of engagement with its community and responsiveness to its constituents, and by defining its constituents as citizens not only of Tennessee, but of the world.

Becoming an engaged and responsive institution is not merely a beneficent act; it is essential in a society which demands accountability from public agencies and institutions. UTK cannot afford to be disconnected from the society which sustains and nurtures it. Maintaining and improving credibility with our public depends on our willingness to direct our intellectual resources toward solutions of the world's problems and toward improvement of the human condition. As a consequence, faculty will experience a sense of worth and empowerment as they see their research, scholarship, and creative activity more firmly connected to a larger purpose which ultimately contributes, directly or indirectly, to the common good.

UTK's revitalized commitment to outreach and the fulfillment of its goal to become an institution fully engaged with its community will require the leadership of UTK's senior administration who must demonstrate, specifically and continuously, their commitment to this goal, by securing funding for the outreach mission and those services which support the institution's capacity to execute the outreach mission (e.g. library services, information infrastructure, and projects and exchanges on the local, national, and international levels). While many outreach activities can be and should be self-supporting, other outreach activities, because of their constituents' inability to pay for services, must be supported by the institution. To do otherwise projects a sense of elitism and undermines our land-grant mandate to provide accessibility and service to all, particularly the educationally and economically disadvantaged. Similarly, if outreach is to be embraced by faculty as an important value of the UTK community that is integrated with the research and instruction missions, the importance of outreach must be reflected in workloads, the tenure and promotion process, and in decisions related to faculty remuneration. Furthermore, both basic and applied research as well as cross-disciplinary and cross-cultural research must be encouraged, nurtured and rewarded if UTK's faculty are to contribute to the knowledge base that addresses the many complex problems of our global community--problems that demand our finest minds and most expert research skills. Moreover, if UTK is to enhance its engagement with its community and its constituents, it must provide access to the University's resources and promote interaction and open communication between the University and its constituents. Relationships must be approached in a spirit of partnership grounded in the sharing of information and resources for the mutual benefit of both UTK and its constituents. The work of the academy, including outreach activities, must necessarily be shaped and informed by engagement with and response to the needs of the community and of the world at large.

Finally, for many years the outreach responsibilities of land-grant universities have been conceived as primarily the duty of the Agriculture Extension Service; however, as beneficial and successful as Extension has been and continues to be, it should no longer carry this mission alone. The complexity, quantity and variety of the challenges of contemporary society are now defined not in national but international terms. They require the resources and participation of all parts of the university through a variety of outreach activities including consulting, technical assistance, basic and applied research, service learning, technology transfer, extension activities, and the use of electronic technology to facilitate public access to UTK's research and instructional resources.

Effective design, deployment, and use of information technology are essential to the core activities of a major university. In a rapidly changing technological environment, our commitment is to meet the ever-expanding need for services by the campus community in a cost-effective manner.

The following goals and objectives will lead to the realization of UTK's vision of becoming a model land-grant university of the twenty-first century:
