Technical Bulletins: Maternity Leave in Tennessee

Richard Stokes

Municipal Technical Advisory Service, Richard.Stokes@tennessee.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://trace.tennessee.edu/utkMtastech

Part of the Public Administration Commons

The MTAS publications provided on this website are archival documents intended for informational purposes only and should not be considered as authoritative. The content contained in these publications may be outdated, and the laws referenced therein may have changed or may not be applicable to your city or circumstances.

For current information, please visit the MTAS website at: mtas.tennessee.edu.

Recommended Citation
https://trace.tennessee.edu/utkMtastech/356

This Bulletin is brought to you for free and open access by the Municipal Technical Advisory Service (MTAS) at TRACE: Tennessee Research and Creative Exchange. It has been accepted for inclusion in MTAS Publications: Technical Bulletins by an authorized administrator of TRACE: Tennessee Research and Creative Exchange. For more information, please contact trace@utk.edu.
Maternity Leave in Tennessee
by Richard L. Stokes, MTAS Personnel Consultant

In 1988, Tennessee joined a growing list of states with legislation requiring employers to provide maternity leave to female employees.

The Tennessee law came in the wake of a Supreme Court decision that a California law wasn’t in violation of the 1978 Pregnancy Disability Act. The California law mandated that California employers provide up to four months of unpaid disability leave to pregnant employees and that they reinstate these employees in the same jobs if possible.

Under the Tennessee act, a female employee who has been employed for at least 12 consecutive months as a full-time employee by the same employer may be on leave from work up to four months for the purpose of pregnancy, childbirth, and nursing the infant. The law doesn’t require employers to provide paid leave to pregnant employees but allows a general right to reinstatement to their former position or a similar position in the organization.

According to the Maternity Leave Act of 1987 (Chapter 21 of the Acts of 1987), a female employee who gives at least a three-month advance notice to her employer of her anticipated date of departure for maternity purposes, her length of maternity leave, and her intention to return to full-time employment shall be restored to her previous or a similar position with the same status, pay, length of service credit, and seniority as of the date of her leave. If a medical emergency causes her maternity leave to begin earlier than originally anticipated, she doesn’t forfeit her rights and benefits under the act if she fails to give a three-month advance notice.

The act recognizes that some positions require special skills and training; therefore, if the employee’s job is so unique that the employer can’t, after reasonable effort, fill the position temporarily, then the employer shall not be liable for failure to reinstate the employee. Also, since the act’s purpose is for pregnancy, childbirth, and nursing the infant, the employer isn’t obligated to reinstate the employee if it is found that the employee used the time to actively pursue other employment opportunities or if the employer finds that the employee has worked part-time or full-time for another employer.

The act doesn’t affect any bargaining agreement or company policy that provides greater or additional benefits than those under the act; nor does it require any employer to provide maternity leave to male employees; nor does it apply to employers with fewer than 100 full-time employees on a permanent basis.

Enforcement of this act shall be sought by filing an original complaint with the Circuit or Chancery court in the county having jurisdiction.

If you have questions about the Tennessee Maternity Leave Act, please contact your MTAS management consultant or Richard Stokes in Nashville at (615) 256-8141.
The Municipal Technical Advisory Service (MTAS) is a statewide agency of The University of Tennessee's Institute for Public Service. MTAS operates in cooperation with the Tennessee Municipal League in providing technical assistance services to officials of Tennessee's incorporated municipalities. Assistance is offered in areas such as accounting, administration, finance, public works, communications, ordinance codification, and wastewater management.

MTAS Technical Bulletins are information briefs that provide a timely review of topics of interest to Tennessee municipal officials. Bulletins are free to Tennessee local, state, and federal government officials and are available to others for $2 each. Contact MTAS for a list of recent Bulletins.

The University of Tennessee
Municipal Technical Advisory Service
600 Henley Street
Suite 120
Knoxville, Tennessee 37996-4105